SPECIAL REPORT

Think back a couple protesting, the hard-hats falling, the flower the generations happened to the (not that we miss them), place? In a the 1975 Trucker Bob Dylan once "These Times Are

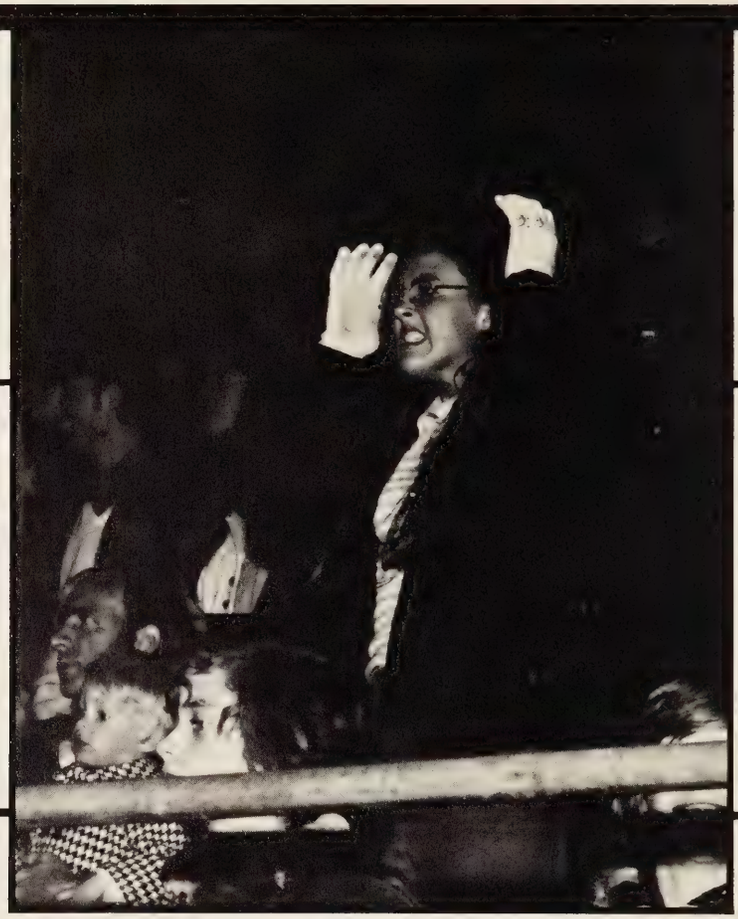
STUDENT LIFE

Today's student lives in a constantly changing world. The most influential and relevant changes determining our future are discussed in the controversial articles and topics that follow. The world is in a constant turmoil as world power bounces from nation to nation, currently at rest in the oil fields of the Middle East. Although some of these changes seem far distant, each plays a role in the stimulation of the student's desire for more freedom, respect, and individuality.

...The Crowds Are Going

What is spirit? Spirit is that intangible driving force found within a student. It can be identified by enthusiasm, excitedness, and exhuberant shouts of students possessing it. We cannot see spirit. We cannot smell, taste, touch, or hear spirit. However, we can see the results of spirit; We can hear the shouts of those who are overflowing with spirit and we can feel spirit surging within ourselves. Spirit tends to increase school loyalty, participation, and support. Spirit is the means by which the 1200 individuals attending Churchland High School are bound to each other and united in one common body.

Spirit is like a bell. It rings when the students act as a clanker against the sides. The sides are made up by such organizations as the football team whose overwhelming victories increase school pride. Cheerleaders have been allotted the task of tolling this bell. They attempt to accomplish this by leading unorganized but spirited students in cheering. The cheerleaders conduct pep rallies which are characterized by shaking walls, claping hands, stomping feet, yelling voices, and excited students.



Exasperation exuding from every pore, Debbie Darley dreads defeat. △

Crazy!

At the pep rally prior to meeting the Bruins, Karen Gabriele encourages pursuit, attack, and destruction.

Symbolizing the Trucker's feelings, Patti Ballentine shows that she thinks that Churchland is Number One.

A pep rally in the stadium on a crisp autumn afternoon was a pleasant way to spend the last half hour of a school day. Steve Parker and David Goldman can bear testimony to the general livliness.

KEEP THIS SHEET AS CLEAN AS POSSIBLE

"What did you make on your boards?" This is a common question put to many juniors and seniors who took the College Entrance Examination Board's Aptitude and Achievement Tests. Racking their minds, students struggle for a combined score of 1200 or above, in hopes that they might satisfy the requirements of the nation's most select schools. Admission becomes doubtful to those who have achieved a combined score of 800 or below. According to the College Entrance Examination Board, a score of this type is considered unsatisfactory.

These tests are more important than ever now, claim college admissions officers. Since many students annually seek a college education, schools must turn to some system to evaluate vast numbers of scholars and a wide range of competition. A true comparison between the nation's students cannot be made based on class standings, personal recommendations and high school records alone. Educational facilities and marking standards vary throughout the country. Therefore, an approach to a scientific method to give all applicants an equal opportunity was needed. The result was standardized tests.

Expense is something to note when taking the tests.

College Boards	$ 6.00
P.S.A.T.	$ 2.50
Achievements	$11.00
Late fee	$ 4.00

Many people take college boards twice, achievements twice, P.S.A.T.'s and pay late fee costing $40.50.

In the past few years, questions have arisen as to the worth of these tests. Critics and students have stipulated that S.A.T.'s are not reliable in predicting intellectual abilities of students. The opulent, middle class, narrowly academic students are inclined to be preferred. Likewise, the exams cannot measure the students' imagination or ultimate job success. It is likely that students whose assets are not shown in the exam's results, may be rejected by some colleges. While an alternate method is trying to be found to substitute the strict verbal and math examinations, the students search for future change.

Trying to understand the multiple-chose questions, Aimee Nelowet struggles on the P.S.A.T.'s in hopes of obtaining a score high enough to satisfy her expectations.

MARIJUANA

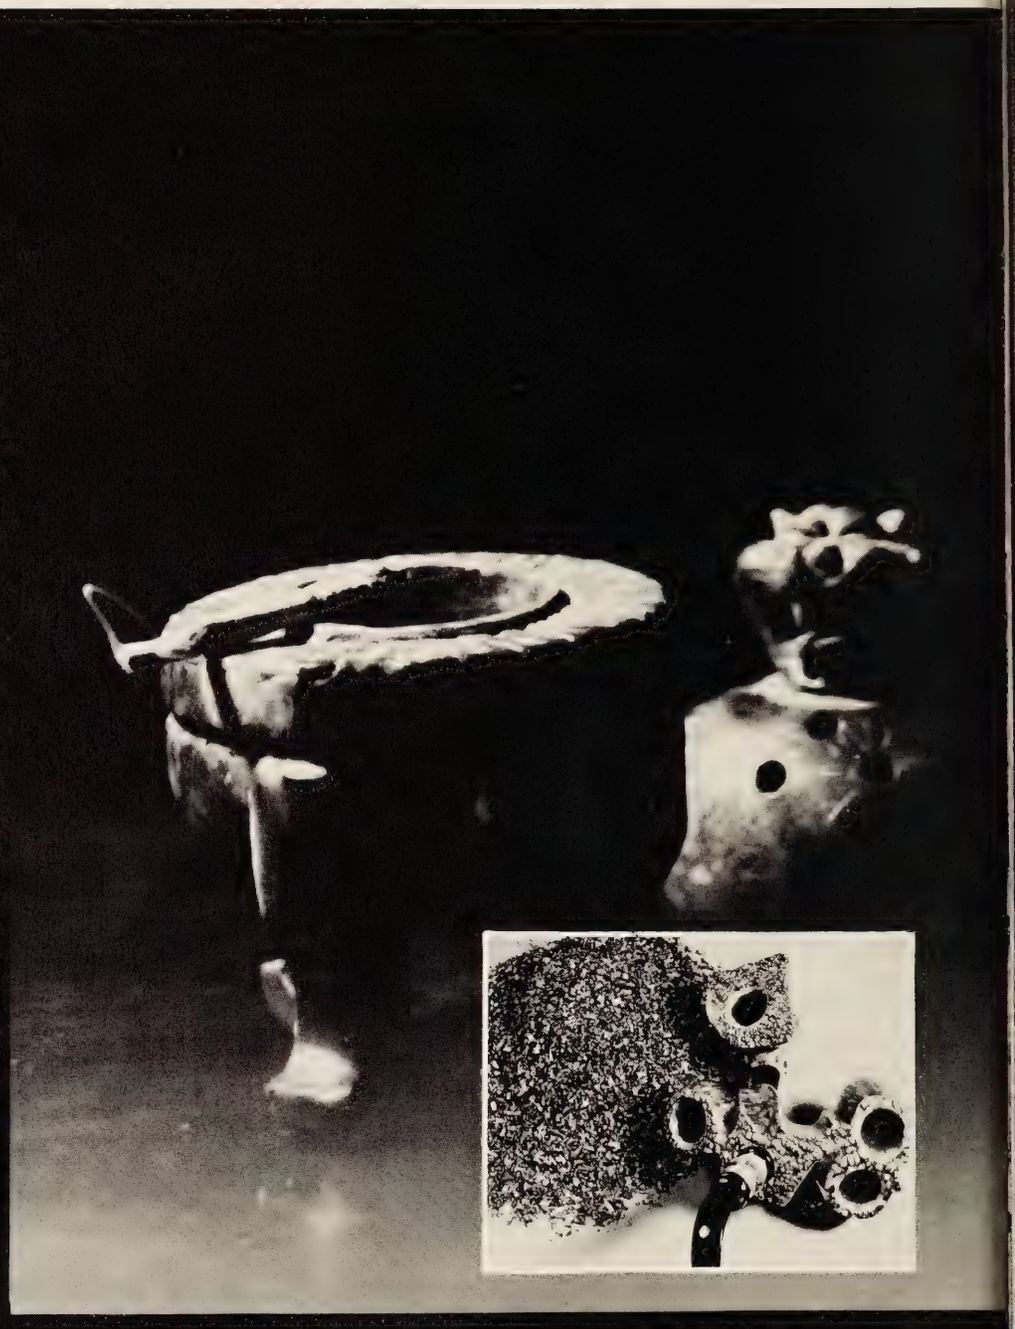
Up, Up, and Out

Imagine an elevator starting from its lowest point, such as a basement. You desperately want to get to the top of the building, but you rule out the stairway from the very beginning. The only thing you're sure of is that you must escape! The reality of that dull confine is too depressing. All you can dream of is that distant roof and its potential.

So there you are at the elevator door in a building — and even as you step in, before you start moving, your heart races a little as you think of the possible dangers: first the elevator might break and you'd never get off . . . second, there's the possibility of its getting stuck between floors; third, there's the possibility that the hotel management will catch you and accuse you of abusing the elevator; fourth and last, depending upon the type of elevator, your ride may fall sizably short of the rooftop or your elevator may gain such momentum that the brakes will fail and you'll literally fly through the ceiling.

Try to ignore this and let's assume that your ascent is safe. As the elevator surges upward, your progress seems slow. Soon, however, the sensation hits you and you're off. All of a sudden you've reached the rooftop. With the sudden burst of speed hurling you upward comes an increasing loss of feeling — a numbness lingers after the elevator has stopped. The door opens onto the roof, and you verily bounce out. Your thoughts in the basement seem to have occurred years ago and miles away, and besides, if they did tend to coast dangerously close, a raucous laugh would repel them away. The long ride to the top has likely left you with a light stomach which craves in hunger. Therefore, you simply pick up the house phone and call up the gourmet dishes of your choice.

The top of the roof is the best. You have discovered a better feeling than the thought of being at the top. Alas, all honeymoons end in time, and there comes the moment when you must leave your rooftop haven behind. The trip down is slow, but not at all unpleasant. As you come back to earth, it's as if you never missed a thing . . . You wait for another trip.



"If all a drug does is kill you, it isn't so bad. It's the quality of life it provides you if you live that should be of most concern." — Anonymous

A youth was stopped for a traffic violation. The public safety official recognized the odor in the violator's car and it was found that he had a few "joints" with him. He was convicted of marijuana possession — an automatic felony because it was his second offense. He received a suspended sentence. (if it had been a first offense, the judge could have convicted him of a misdemeanor, in which case, the following questions are not pertinent). Maybe you think a felony conviction and a suspended sentence aren't that bad, something the youth could take in stride and not lose much. What did he lose?

T or F 1. He lost his right to vote and to run for public office.
T or F 2. He cannot own a gun.
T or F 3. He lost his chance to ever be a licensed doctor, dentist or lawyer.
T or F 4. He cannot be a certified public accountant or school teacher.
T or F 5. He cannot be an engineer or architect.
T or F 6. He cannot be a funeral director or stockbroker.
T or F 7. He can never get a job where he has to be bonded or licensed.
T or F 8. He cannot work for the City, County, State or Federal Government.
T or F 9. He cannot be admitted to West Point, Annapolis, or the Air Force Academy.
T or F 10. He did not lose very much.

HIGH SCHOOL

Is Your High School

No one has to tell you that something is wrong with America's high schools. And most thinking people of all ages are ready to agree that those institutions are suffering from some gut-deep disease. But there's little agreement about what is wrong. I'd like to suggest that the disease is obsolescence: most of our high schools are as outdated as the stone ax.

Routinely you are told that you must finish high school because it will help equip you to lead a better life "in the future." Most adults view the future as a straightline continuation of the present. Yet we are living through a period of the most rapid change in history. Everything changes. Not all these changes are necessarily good. But good or bad, they are creating a future drastically different from the present.

When we apply the idea of obsolescence to high schools . . . these are some of the questions I would ask:

1. Is its curriculum oriented toward the future? Hundreds of schools are now introducing fascinating courses . . . in which future life styles, careers, crises, and opportunities are discussed. Courses in which students have a chance to prove their own values with respect to change . . . Students have a right to ask any teacher: "What does this have to do with my tomorrow?"

2. Does it offer action — learning opportunities? Not all learning takes place in the classroom. In recognition of that fact, some schools now make it possible for students to work at jobs, or to perform volunteer service in the community, and to get educational credit for it. Programs for care of the aged, for pollution control, traffic controls or noise control, full or part-time jobs in fields like photography, journalism, . . . if the school cooperates, can be turned into extremely valuable learning.

3. How diverse are the courses it offers? Are students saddled with too many requirements? Or are they able to choose from many alternatives? Most of us do recognize a need for certain basic requirements. We need the ability to read, write, and converse with others. We need certain shared knowledge. But . . . does the school allow a student to work out an independent study program? Can he or she take a course at a nearby school or college, for credit? If not, why not?

4. Is the school run from the top down? Today most businesses and government organizations are set up as rigid hierarchies, with orders coming down a chain of command, very much like the army.

Can students at the school really influence schedules, dress codes, curriculum? Or is the school still autocratic? Certainly, students should not have full control of curriculum or administrative matters. They may be permitted to decide how many dances to hold in a semester, but they are not allowed to deal with significant educational issues. Is the student government free to be critical of school policies? What about the school newspaper? Or are they simply a puppet government and a public relations mouthpiece?

5. Is the work largely routine? Some routines are necessary in life. Eating and sleeping are biologically required routines. But obsolete schools are so busy training us to use routines that they often drill the adaptability out of us. In the past, schools emphasized repetitive work because adult life was routine and repetitive.

At the same time, as change in all fields makes us confront new problems and first-time situations in our personal lives, old habits, programmed behavior and routine responses become less and less helpful.

6. Does it offer alternatives to the lecture? Since time immemorial, school has meant a classroom in which an older person pumped knowledge into the heads of a large number of younger people.

Obsolete?

Obsolete schools give only one kind of organizational experience — the standard lecture type in which one person dominates the group. Innovative schools are trying to give students experience with a variety of forms: student-led seminars; faculty-student interdisciplinary problem-solving teams; "open," seemingly unstructured classes or projects; all in addition to the lecture system. This not only makes learning more interesting, it provides a taste of the organizational diversity we'll face in the future.

7. Is it still age-segregated? Most high schools segregate one age group from another, creating a kind of age-based apartheid. Fifteen-year-olds . . . have little opportunity to learn from older students or help younger ones.

. . . Schools should invite adults of all ages — including retired people from the nearby community — into the classrooms and the work teams, so that the generation gap is bridged. People from the community have a lot to teach . . . Similarly, older folks have a lot to learn from young people and can benefit from contact with the freshness of youth. One idea: Finding a "community mentor" for each student . . . so that the student has a chance to see that knowledge being put to practical use and has a chance to talk about it with someone rather than his teacher.

8. To what extent is racism (conscious or unconscious) part of the school atmosphere? We are moving into a world in which peoples of diverse backgrounds — racial, religious, national, as well as economic and educational — will be brought into first-hand contact with one another. The student who grows up dealing with only his or her "own kind" is ill-prepared for the new realities. Racism is . . . a question of psychological attitudes and hidden stereotypes. For a long time many blacks (not to mention Jews, Italians, Ukrainians, Catholics and others) were secretly ashamed of not looking like Doris Day or not being white Anglo-Saxon and Protestant. Survival in the decades ahead will be based on a recognition of the need for social diversity rather than uniformity, . . .

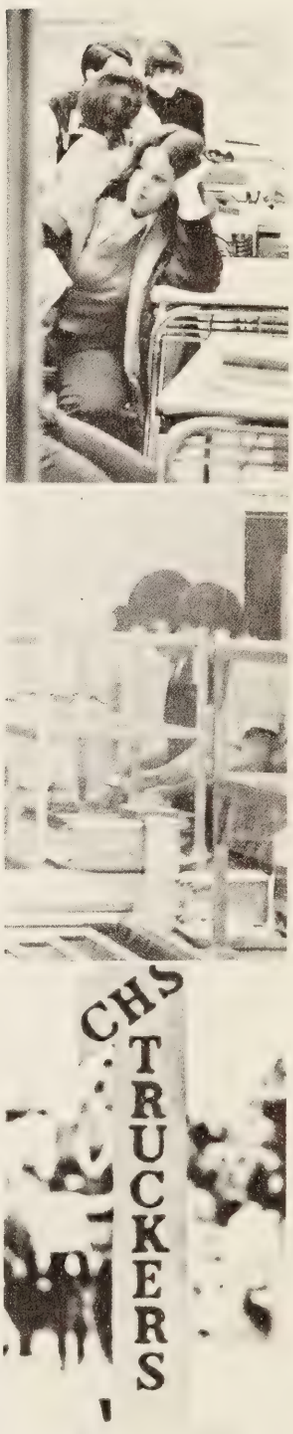
9. Is the school itself an ecological menace? Each school is part of the ecological network of the society. The school that pollutes or contributes to environmental breakdown is, by its very existence, teaching a lesson that damages the students' chances for survival.

In short, schools teach both through the formal program in the classroom and by the way they are conducted in relation to the community. A school that is ecologically irresponsible is not only a menace, it is a bad teacher, since its purpose presumably is to help students live better in the future — or even just live.

10. Do values get short shrift? The faster the world changes and the more complicated it grows, the harder it becomes for all of us as individuals, and as groups, to make sensible decisions. Anyone who thinks seriously about it for a moment will recognize that it is impossible for schools to avoid dealing with values.

Schools that avoid discussion of the hard questions (such as "What am I living for?" "What would I be willing to die for — if anything?" "What are my responsibilities to society and the people close to me?" "What things are more important than others?") fail to develop the student's ability to cope with rapid change and complex choice.

This, then, is my test for academic obsolescence. It's up to students, along with change-oriented educators and community people, to help bring the schools into the present so that they can help prepare all of us — young and old alike — for the future.



LUNCH

At Least It's Wholesome

To Cathy Parrino, lunch means a brief respite from studies, a chance to quench her thirst, or to finish some homework for her next class.

Violent reactions have arisen concerning the cafeteria-style food. This has become a serious controversy which centers itself around three major points. The points of great discussion are: the food, the extremely long lines, and the lunch shifts themselves. Most widely publicized is the food. Some people don't even consider it food! What the students don't realize is that the cafeteria provides us with a well-balanced meal within their limited budget. The lunchroom even loses money on each plate lunch. Even if you went to McDonald's or a place of that sort, a meal costs almost a dollar. What do people expect, a steak dinner with all the trimmings? A number of dishes offered do include tasty, nourishing food like turkey, chicken, pizza, barbecue, and spaghetti.

Another trouble spot is the lunch line. By the time you battle your way through the mass of people, fight for a plate, and get to the cash register, your meal is cold or the period has ended. Someone finally came up with the idea of forming a line on the other side of the cafeteria for those who want ice cream and milk. Although there are still long lines, this has helped move people away from the cash register which handles complete lunch purchases.

This year's two-break lunch system has packed a greater number of students into an equal amount of space, and has added to the already great confusion. People complain about the problems but no one is willing to come up with any suggestions.

"Those are the breaks!"

"What's everybody

Forever grouped, numbered, and as Robert Frost might have said, "departmentalized," the student of the seventies is found looking for a change outside his school life. After the long stretch of the week, many seek release by seeing too-often neglected friends, by rediscovering one's own self, or by going to that favorite little place at the beach. In the following photo-essay with accompanying thoughts, changing student pastimes are seen as the veritable variety of life.

"Saturday night is alright," sang Elton John and the young seem to clearly agree. (Counter-clockwise) Whether at a school sock-hop or a Bob Dylan concert of his 1974 tour, at a basketball game or local foozball parlor, they came and they made the best of the moment. A pepperoni pizza was always sure to follow.

Just walk beside me

Left: For tossing a frisbee, swinging on vines, or navigating a paddleboat, Sleepy Hole is the haven of carefree teenagers. Sunday is for nursing those bruised areas from roller skating the night before (right).

"Getting away from it all" is sometimes as important as companionship. Left to right: Peddling energetically or dozing before a television, getting a kick out of children or perfecting that corner-pocket-split, are all favorite pastimes. The industrious might work for a car, but the stereo freak will blow his money on a 105-r.m.s. amplifier.

"Let's find a far-off place,

Too busy to stop and to notice
the things that are real and there is no talk about all the things that I feel.
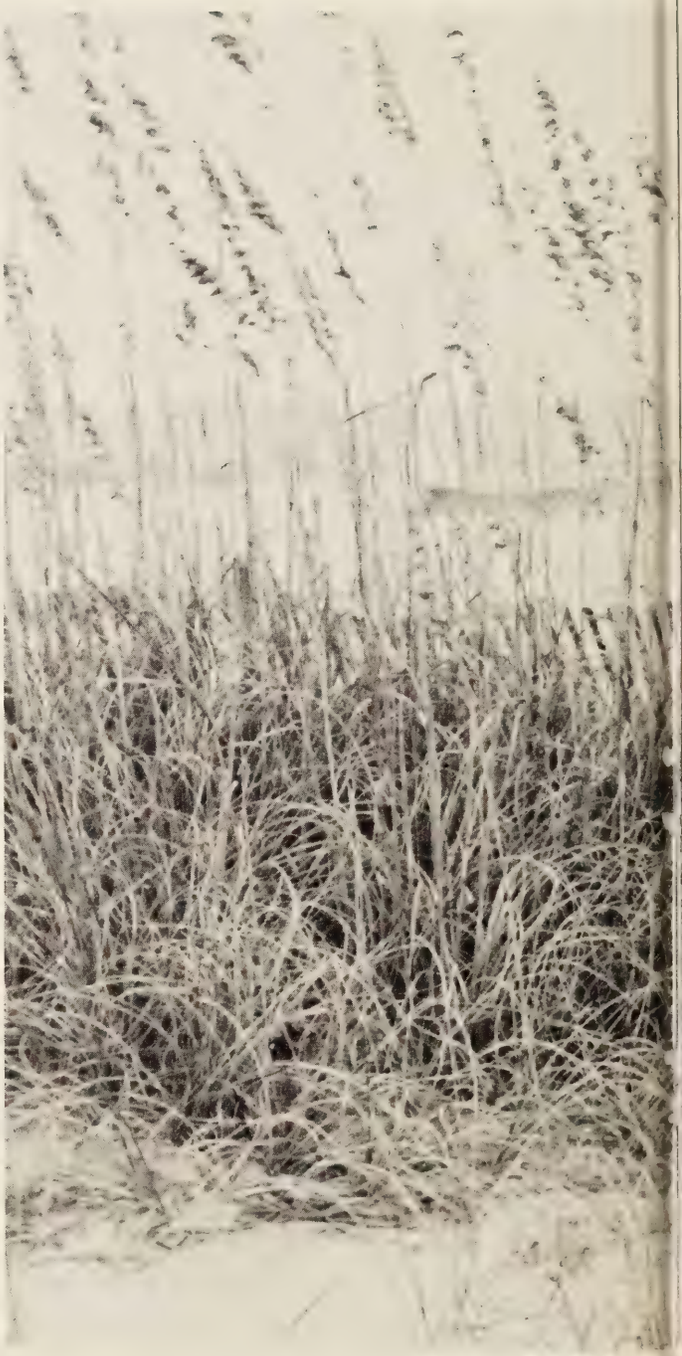
It's so strange,
Never noticed the world
all around me.
Lyrics by Don and Dick Addrissi



Cooperating in singular harmony, the sun, surf, and sand beckon their worshippers to Virginia Beach. Summer seems to regenerate the teenagers who pour into the world's largest resort area; yet, for the introverted, winter offers a gaunt charm of its own. The woods and waterways surrounding the area are inviting from the crowds and asphalt of urban life.

O.K.? . . . "O.K.!"

FUND RAISING

CAPITALIST CHURCHLAND

Isn't it delightful to be confronted by every Joe Blow who is selling some extraordinary item? One cannot decide between a mug and a candle, a box of M & M's and a box of doughnuts, a poster board and a banner; so one buys them all. Isn't it fortunate that our monetary supplies are so plentiful?

As soon as the Junior Class wrapped up its paper sale, the Varsity Cheerleaders jumped right into a mug sale. The astronomy class sold candy which orbited the school. (How sweet of them!), and the band conducted its way through the sale of assorted items in a kit. The girl's basketball team, making a substantial net gain, scored with poster boards. Various other clubs have dealt the same hand.

It seems as though requirements for joining most school organizations include good salesmanship, big smile, fast mouth and hands, persuasive gestures, and an acceptance of banality.

What has happened to originality? Yes, originality. Oh, I see, it's gone out of style. Well, I'll tell you anyway. Originality is time-saving, money-making, agony-free, guilt-free, and, best of all, originality is free! And it's been rumored that originality is coming back in September. I know, this is shocking, absurd, and unheard of, but I feel that it is my duty to keep the public informed.

Well, that just about winds up my sales pitch for originality. Just one more thing, a person shouldn't sacrifice his originality in order to steal someone else's bag. One should base his ideas on his own originality. (Now do you get the pitcher? Good, then you're safe.)

Everyone is so money-minded, but if we must be, then let's develop those rich thoughts of ours. Let's take those make-a-buck items off the CHS market. Recent brainstorming among creative students resulted in suggestions to: sponsor a dance, hold an auction, stage a marathon. Let's allow new ideas to pay dividends.

So, you agree with me. Then why don't you stop selling such junk?*

COMICS

CARTOON CRITIQUE

In this day and age the communication system has become so vast that people are sometimes drowned with both the important and the unimportant. Television, newspaper, and magazine are major ways that many maintain an up-to-date knowledge of current events. With Watergate, the Energy Crunch, and a staggering economy, news certainly lends itself to a higher degree of dullness. To escape the gloomy aspects that are present from day to day, the TRUCKER would like to offer a diversion in this cartoon commentary of the years problems and situations.

ACHIEVEMENT

BETTER THAN MEDIOCRE

"To reach a goal through special effort, great valor, etc." is to achieve. Students who achieve more than the average student deserve to be acknowledged. They are the ones who put in an extra hour of practice for the concert, the game, or the play, study more than "just enough to get by," and put forth a little extra effort in order to excel. It is they who help to make Churchland High and its students better than mediocre and a respected secondary school. Not only does the school profit from their achievement but also, the student himself gains a feeling of satisfaction and selfesteem.

DISTINCTION

A LITTLE EXTRA

Distinction, defined as "superiority," is attained by many students each year. Superiority in art, drama, grades, leadership, music, sports, and overall school activities distinguishes some students from the average. Recognition is given in all facets of student life to those who excel; therefore, each student has an equal chance to show his or her superiority in the aspect of school life which he or she does best.

FANTASYLAND

Everybody, at one time or another, has had fantasies which incessantly creep into their minds. Surely, the students, faculty, and administration of Churchland have all experienced these premonitions.

On the following pages some of these fantasies are revealed, as a number of storybook and fairy tale characters are transplanted into the land of Churchland. Their exploits and problems, are, for the most part, fictitious, but they do, nevertheless, expose the inhibited ideals and ideas of Churchland life.

Of course, for those at Churchland, who still believe that copy (articles) should not be in a yearbook, there are drawings which superbly depict the scenes as they might have actually happened.

RULES

The object of the game is to graduate before anyone else. To do this, a total of 23 credits must be accumulated. Of these 23, five credits in English, two in Math, two in Science, three in History, and three in Physical Education (Gym) are required. Everytime you go completely around you receive one credit of your choice. Everytime you land on a block, you get a credit for that course. If you land on that block twice, you do not get double credit. If sent to the office, you must roll doubles on the dice in order to get out. (Supply your own dice.)

To Dress Or Not To Dress? That Is The Question.

It was the beginning of September and Cinderella was an upcoming ninth grader. Despite the fact that she had been promoted, she had no clothes which were acceptable to wear in school.

When the first day of school came around, her problem had not been solved. If she dressed the way she desired, she would be sent home. What was she going to do!

After a quick telephone call to her fairy godmother, it seemed that all her woes had ended. For the fairy godmother waved her magic wand and instantly, Cinderella was wearing a beautiful dress from Saks Fifth Avenue. (Of course, the fairy godmother had good taste.) The only stipulation was that she had to return home by 2:30 because her clothes would change back to their original form.

Weeks passed and all seemed fine, until a teacher made her stay later than usual one day.

Before she could leave, the clock struck 2:30. Cindy was desperate and confused. "What am I to do?" Cinderella said to herself. "What will happen if the main man catches me?"

Thinking quickly, she decided to run home as quickly as possible. Down the stairs she went, through the halls . . .

"Stop!" cried a voice, "You are dressed improperly. Your belly button is showing and that violates Section V, paragraph three of the dress code. Don't you know the rules?"

"But Mr. Trucker, it's only a belly button. What harm is it doing?"

"Let me tell you something. Early this morning I had to ask five boys to tuck their shirttails in, and now, I have you. There is no excuse for it. You represent the school and, therefore, you must dress in a manner which brings respect to the school."

"Nevertheless, I feel at ease dressed the way which pleases me most. I can't see what educational hindrance a belly button is."

"My dear Cinderella, if you dress like this again, I will be compelled to send you home for good. Is that understood?"

Since Cindy could not reveal the story about her clothes, she was forced to comply with his request.

Hansel and Gretel Eat Away

Exhausted by the ordeals of their first day in the land of CHS, Hansel and Gretel trudged down the hall. It had been a horribly difficult morning. Hansel was cross and extremely ravenous; Gretel was just as ravenous.

"Really," Hansel said to his sister, "I am not going to let school get in the way of my learning! I'll . . ." Hansel stopped in the middle of her sentence as an unearthly, unbelievable, and incredibly strange odor wafted by their noses. Their hungry looking faces lit up. "Gretel!" Hansel shouted, "that smells delicious!"

"Well," Gretel replied, "it smells."

Undaunted, Hansel started running down the hall. Gretel followed.

They found themselves in a large room full of food which was emanating the unearthly, unbelievable, and incredibly strange odor. Gretel looked around. "Not exactly the Jolly Ox, but it will do," she commented.

Hansel didn't reply. He just grabbed a strange leathery substance and took a large bite. Gretel followed suit.

Hansel looked at Gretel. Gretel looked at Hansel. "This," Hansel softly said to Gretel, "is not exactly what I had in mind."

Both stood up and smiled politely at the witch who was standing nearby. "Guess we'll be running along now," they said in unison. The nearsighted witch came closer and stuck out one white-clad arm. She grabbed Gretel's slide rule and, then, her arm.

"Now look how thin your arm is my dear. Why, it feels like a bone. Our meals are 100% balanced, wholly nutritious, completely fortified, and contain vitamins A,B,C,D, and especially E.

Gretel looked at Hansel. They both panicked and ran frantically to the door. There they were stopped by a large person. "Where do ya' think you're goin'?" the person asked. "Ya' gotta' pass? Well, ya' can't go anywhere without a pass!"

Hansel looked at Gretel. "I think I'm going to be sick," she said.

They slowly walked back to the witch. She smiled. Eat!" she commanded.

They ate, and ate, and ate, until they could eat no more. Then, miraculeously, a Great Bell rang. Cautiously, they got up and started to leave.

"Wait a minute!" said the witch with a large grin. "You haven't paid."

This was the crowning blow. "Do you mean to say," Hansel shouted, looking extremely green around the gills, "that we have to pay for that?"

The witch smiled benevolently and stuck out her hand. Groaning, Hansel and Gretel handed over their money. The witch winked at the large person by the door. "See you tomorrow kids," she chortled as Hansel and Gretel galloped frantically out of the door.

Alice in ... Churchlandland?

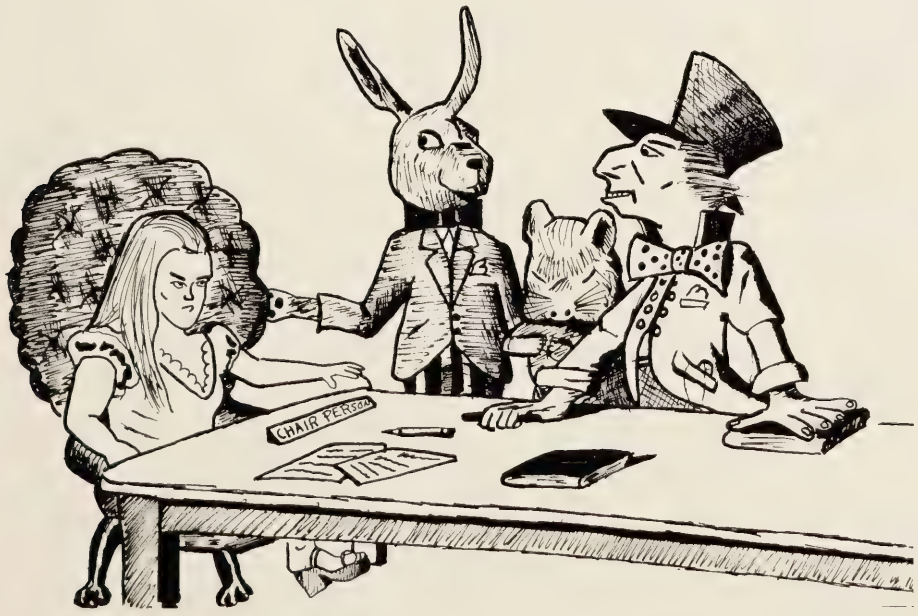
"Do you mean," interjected the March Hare, "that you feel directly responsible for the actions taken by this committee?"

"That is exactly what I mean."

"Well then, I wish you would say what you mean instead of merely meaning what you say."

Alice bit her lip in despair. While doing so, she saw the silent, but grinning, Chesire Cat. She was going to ask him if he could help her do some work, but he, sensing that work was her objective, disappeared. Alice tried desperately to get their attention.

Breaking up the confusion was a knock on the door. It was Alice's mother. "It's time to get up and go to school, honey. You don't want to be late." All the while, Alice had been in a dream, or better still, a nightmare. However, she soon became upset when she realized a worse nightmare was ahead of her. Alice had been appointed the chairperson of a committee.



Having been appointed chairperson of a committee, Alice was experiencing a rather difficult time in getting any work completed because of the members of the committee.

"This meeting will now come to order." Continuing, the authoritative Alice said, "We are here to limit the number of activities in which a person can participate, in order that we may induce more efficient committees. I believe that we could . . ."

At this point the Queen of Hearts interrupted. "If anyone is going to give his opinion, it should be me. After all, I have done more research on this topic than anyone else and everyone will agree that I am more qualified to lead this discussion." The Queen paused to catch her breath.

Alice ignored her and proceeded with her sentence, which was directed toward the Mock Turtle. "I feel we could all benefit from your report on . . ."

The Mock Turtle, overcome with emotion, began to cry and to mumble. "I lost it, but it's not my fault. You see, it all began the day I was born." Afterward, he launched into his life story, which they all knew by heart.

Alice, glancing up, saw the White Rabbit in the doorway. A grain of hope began to grow in her mind because the White Rabbit was highly respected and extremely active in school.

"Whitey, could you please . . ."

Before Alice even had the words out of her mouth, Whitey was replying, "No! No! I don't have time. I'm too busy. I'm just too busy doing . . ."

They couldn't hear the rest of his sentence because he was already down the hall, so the Mad Hatter finished it for him," . . . doing nothing."

Alice, catching sight of the Dutchess and the Mad Hatter torturing the door mouse, said, "I wish you wouldn't treat the poor thing with such ghastly cruelty."

The Dutchess immediately retorted, "And I wish you mind your own business. If everyone would mind their own business, the world's problems would be solved."

Alice, already exasperated, tried to express herself. "I am minding my own business, which is the business of the committee!"

Walkie Talkie Squad

An another day begins, we see the "Walkie Talkie Squad" from the Churchland precinct doing their duty . . .

"Come in, home base, come in. Do you read me?"

"Roger."

"This is W.T. 2. There is a 1227 in the boys' bathroom on the second floor. Bring in all available units."

"Will do, W.T. 2."

As they rush to the second floor, additional forces, in an attempt to forestall the guilty student, respond to the request.

However, the nimble fugitive scales the stall wall, jumps over the toilets, crawls under the sink, and flees through the gaping bathroom door.

Although the startled officials stand stunned by the fleet-footed villain, they finally continue in their pursuit of the student.

Racing past the corner, one of the less agile squad members slips and twists his ankle. Despite his injury he gets up from the floor and rejoins the wild chase.

By the time he reaches the end of the hall, the sound of pounding feet has ceased. The student is cornered with no apparent means of escape. The exhausted members of the "Walkie Talkie Squad" have finally captured their prey. While they are walking down the hall, the head member is heard saying in classic Steve McGarret style, "Book him."

The Frog And The Prince

Once upon a time in the land of reality there existed certain social groupings which everyone assumed to be fair and just. The upper class consisted of elite groups known as "cliques." Not everyone, however, was a member of a clique, for throughout the kingdom roamed lonely individuals who had been branded as outcasts. No one knew when

4 Billy Goats Gruff

Once upon a time, there lived four billy goats gruff. One day the three youngest goats, walking across the Churchland bridge, heard this irritating noise from below.

"No need to be afraid," said the oldest of the three, "it's only another billy goat."

Of course, no one is correct all the time, and that includes the oldest goat. For again, from under the bridge came that voice. "Do you have permission to be here? Where is your note and where are you going?"

The three goats were so frightened that they ran quickly home to tell their story. After hearing it, the oldest goat went to the bridge and said, "Who are you and why do you harass my younger friends?"

"I am head of the trolls," replied the voice. I am powerful, for I have many trolls under me."

"Nevertheless, why do you bother my friends?"

"They were walking across my bridge without a note. For all I know, they might have tried to escape from our grounds and that breaks all the rules."

"Alright," the billy goat was forced to reply, "you will have your way this time, but there must be some changes. There is no reason to frighten the younger goats just for accomplishing a goal." With that, the oldest goat turned and walked away.

"Wait," yelled the head troll, "it's for your own good . . ."

or why the cliques had originated or why the outcasts were excluded from the cliques. Nobody had ever taken the time to analyze their social system. Everyone took it for granted that the social classes were based on just and non-discriminating principles.

One fair day, a need arose within the cliques. However, none of the members of the upper class could do anything to improve the situation. A mass assembly of all citizens in the land was called to discuss what could possibly solve their problem.

One outcast, named Peter Frog, who was generally considered insignificent and was ignored, stepped forward and said, "I feel that I can gratify your longing." After saying this, he heard hundreds of people gasp in amazement and saw hundreds of piercing eyes scrutinizing his person.

Although no one wanted to offer Peter an opportunity to prove his statement, the cliques' false etiquette demanded that he be given the chance. Peter, taking advantage of the situation, attempted to end their distress and succeeded.

The stunned masses felt as if the kiss of truth and revelation had touched them. In their eyes he was no longer the despised Peter Frog, but a Prince.

"Hey, there's an assembly today — we miss first period!"

"Great! We get out of English!"

"What's it about anyway?"

"Well, it's probably National Honor Society, Marshals, Homecoming, Chorus, or a pep rally."

"Sounds all right to me!"

ELECTION 1974

See How They Run

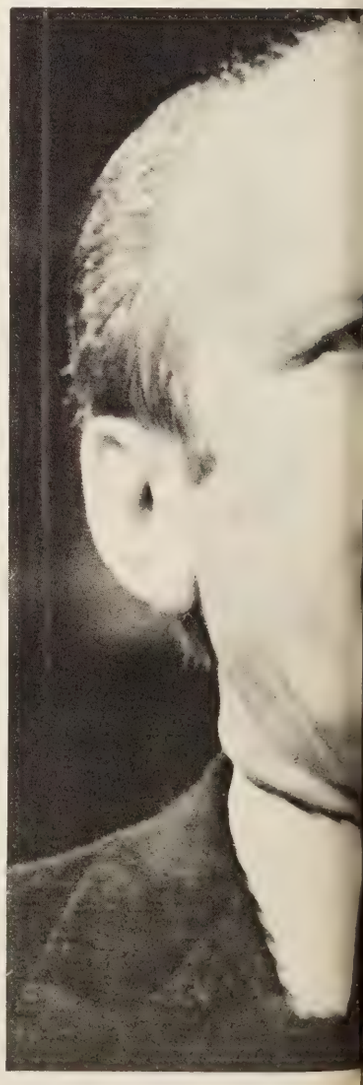
Congressional races, by their very nature, tend to arouse only the slightest interest; yet, Virginia's fourth district witnessed a most lively campaign. With the Republican party stained by memories of Watergate and a failing economy, it was expected that incumbent Rep. Robert Daniel would be in for quite a race. Originally challenging Daniel was a liberal Democrat, Lester Schlitz, who attracted the blue collar and black vote. Observers felt that this race would be one of the closest in the state until Curtis Harris, a black minister from Hopewell, entered the race. Rev. Harris' candidacy was thought to be a minor factor, at first, threatening to take a small amount of Schlitz's black support.

Riding on Nixon's coattails in 1972, Daniel successfully downplayed his party label and ran a low-keyed campaign. Well financed and having good name recognition throughout the broad district, he ran the "luncheon-speaking engagement" when not detained by a heavy schedule in Washington. Daniel drew on his record of fiscal responsibility and impressed this area with his support of military projects. Daniel was boosted by a tremendously organized campaign staff from the '72 election. He sought votes from the white collar workers and from the upper-middle class while completely abandoning any hopes for black support. For the most part, Daniel portrayed a reserved, studious image. At a post Labor Day press conference, however, he blasted out at Schlitz calling him a "liar" for mistaken details of fact. He later said that this was out of his character to say this.

Knowing that he was up against tremendous odds, Lester Schlitz began campaigning in a "populist" style. A consumer advocate with a healthy record in the state legislature, he vigorously attacked Daniel saying he'd "wrap it (Daniel's record) around Daniel's neck and ring it like a cow bell!" Schlitz also used inflation and rising food costs against Daniel. He chose a novel stratagem by visiting all 400 grocery stores across tht 105-mile wide district in order to get his message across to the shoppers. After receiving large endorsements from labor, education, and black groups, the outcome seemed to grow more promising.

Only in the last several weeks did Rev. Harris' candidacy seem serious. By arousing interest in black communities, the threat of a groundswell vote for Harris challenged Schlitz's support. Despite most black leaders backing Schlitz and asking repeatedly for Harris to drop out of the race, he still campaigned laboriously on a poverty platform. Harris spoke of racial injustice and the needs of the poor and accused his rivals of ignoring these.

The combined effects of Daniel's steady conservatism, Schlitz's lively liberalism, and Harris' persistence caused greater political interests at the end of a messy political year. Only when the final results came in was anyone really sure of the outcome. Daniel won convincingly over Schlitz while Harris held the swing votes. (See pages 54 & 55)



The Democrats are having a lot of fun exposing Republican campaign corruptions, but they'ed have a lot more fun if they could get their hands on some of it themselves. — Will Rogers

Candidates Daniel, Harris, and Schlitz could never agree to debate before public forums; even so, they often attacked one another verbally when on the same stage.

With greater effort than any president before him, Gerald Ford stumped for Republican candidates and, in a sense, for his own new administration. Despite his warning of a veto-proof Congress, Democrats won overwhelmingly.

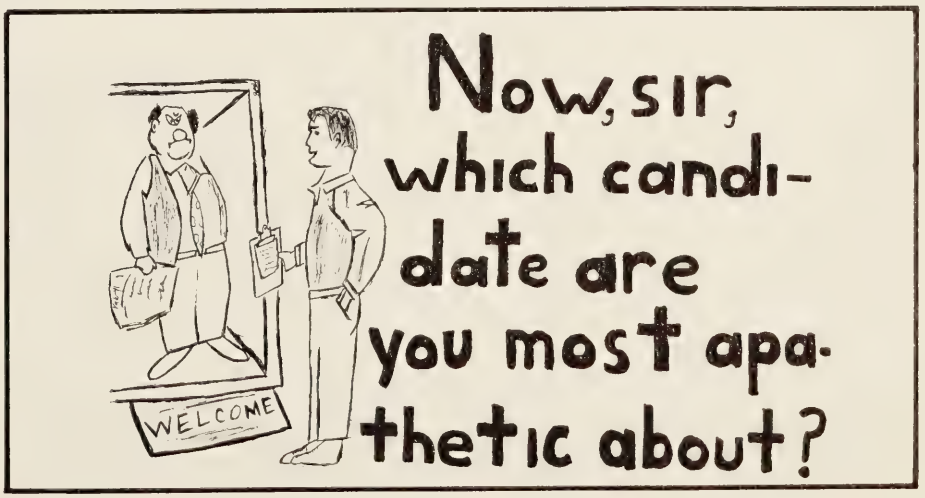
S-W-E-E-P-I-N-G up victories all across the nation, the Democratic candidates took the spoils of the election battles with the troubled Republicans. The Democrats took advantage of Watergate and an ailing economy, saying that the 1974 election was a referendum for a new style of government. None the less, after the victory parties they found a disgruntled electorate waiting for answers. As Time magazine said," . . . they (the voters) surely loved Republicans the less but not necessarily Democrats the more."

President Ford was out campaigning for G.O.P. candidates in Utah, Portland, and countless other places giving warning of a veto-proof Congress; his help, however, was only meager. Those Republicans most aligned with the Nixon Administration, in fact, seemed to take the worst beating. Charles Sandman and Joseph Maraziti, both outspoken Nixon supporters on the House Impeachment Committee, lost by large margins.

Democrats advanced forty-three seats in the House to a total of 291, over two-thirds majority; they also advanced four more seats in the Senate for a majority of sixty-two. In statehouses there are now thirty-six Democratic governors. Women also reasserted their position in Congress by winning eighteen House elections and over 117 more state legislature seats across the nation.

Looking at 1976, the Democratic party made considerable gains toward the White House; yet if things don't take shape soon, they might catch tne blame for the nation's ills.



MOCK ELECTION

LET'S MAKE ONE THING

PERFEC

Well, if it wasn't made perfectly clear, at least the three representatives for the congressional candidates showed everyone that there was an election in November. And the audience seemed to learn that fast. Responding to the speakers with clapping, booing, and above all, genuine interest, the assembly heard the political propaganda and later showed their choice at the voting booth.

Co-ordinated by the SCA, the assembly was held a week before the general election. It was attended by all social studies classes; Chris Connelly acted as master of ceremonies.

Mary Jones, the representative for the Rev. Curtis Harris (I), spoke about Harris' concern and his opponents alleged lack of concern for the lower income people of the fourth district. She claimed the voting records of Daniel and Schlitz were hypocritical.

Bob Weed talked primarily about Rep. Robert Daniel's (R) stand on food supply and target prices. Despite using many hypocritical situations, he seemed to get across his argument concerning Daniel's "practically" and Schlitz's "good intentions."

Succeeding in impressing his audience with enthusiasm and candor, David Schlitz spoke for his father, Del. Lester Schlitz (D). He handled a wide range of topics, especially stressing their relevance to the students.

After the conflicting speeches had aroused the listeners, pointed questions were taken by those on stage. Although the time seemed to run much too short, the turnout at the polls was a mere twenty-seven percent. Lester Schlitz won the mock election overwhelmingly in the one section of the district where the opposite was expected. (see Box)

. . .and I think we need to send someone to Washington who knows what he's voting on. While candidate X (glances to David) speaks with good intentions, Bob Daniel speaks with practicality."

David Schlitz:

" . . .Lester Schlitz has fought the Bank Lobby. Lester Schlitz has fought Vepco. Lester Schlitz has fought the Milk Commission.

. . .If you're satisfied with the way things are going, then send Bob Daniel back to Congress. But if you want a man who will stand up for you, then elect Lester Schlitz."

POWDER PUFF

Juniors Win Grueling Contest

On December 4, 1974, the Junior girls met the Senior girls in the annual Powder Puff game. Sitting through 20°weather and a biting wind, loyal spectators saw the Juniors surprise the Seniors, defeating them by a score of 14 to 8.

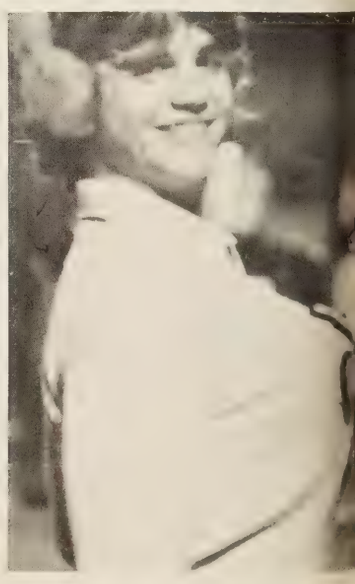
The Juniors, sporting new and exciting plays, made the first score of the game, midway in the 2nd quarter. After a long, dramatic run by "Debra Sue" Coston, the Juniors found themselves deep into Senior territory. On the next play from the line of scrimmage, Debra Coston again got the call and ran into the end zone untouched for the first Junior score. On the attempt for the extra point, Junior quarterback Susan LaMotte passed to fullback Amy Scarr in the end zone, making the score 8-0.

A tough Junior defense held the threatening Seniors with Juniors gaining possession of the ball after a fumble recovery by Linda Kavanaugh. Half time then began as the two teams made an exit for the locker rooms, with the score Juniors: 8 — Seniors: 0.

The 3rd quarter failed to yield much excitement, as both team's defenses tightened up and allowed no scoring. The fourth quarter commenced with the score still Juniors: 8 — Seniors: 0. The Juniors struck first in the fourth quarter. Using many sweeps and options, the Juniors found themselves deep into Senior territory with the ball within the 20 yard line. The Juniors then scored another 6 pts. on a pass from quarterback "Lock 'em up" LaMotte to waiting fullback "Prune ' Scarr. The extra point attempt was unsuccessful due to a good pass rush by the Seniors.

With the score 14-0, the Seniors headed by Ann Brown, came to life. Despite many devastating tackles by junior "Wild Woman" Wilder, the Junior defense failed to stop sweeping "Bruiser" Brown as she ran for the Seniors first touchdown of the game. On the 2 point conversion attempt Ann Brown again got the ball and ran into the end zone, narrowing the Junior lead 14-8. The Senior defense held the juniors, thus forcing the Juniors to "punt." With about 3 minutes left on the clock, the Seniors began another threatening drive. They advanced by "powderful" running and a long succession of Junior penalties. Sporting a crucial penalty, the disheartened Seniors found themselves on the Juniors' 40 yard line.

In desperation the Seniors went to the air. On a big pass play, junior Brenda Sykes intercepted a Senior pass, thus giving the Juniors possession of the ball with less than one minute to go in the game. The Seniors, without any timeouts remaining, helplessly watched as the time on the clock dwindled, and Juniors tried desperately not to commit any errors. With only 17 seconds remaining in the game, on a fourth down, the junior quarterback fell on the ball to conserve the victory as the clock ran out. The exciting Powder Puff game between the class of '75 and the class of '76 ended with the class of '76 victorious by a score of 14-8.

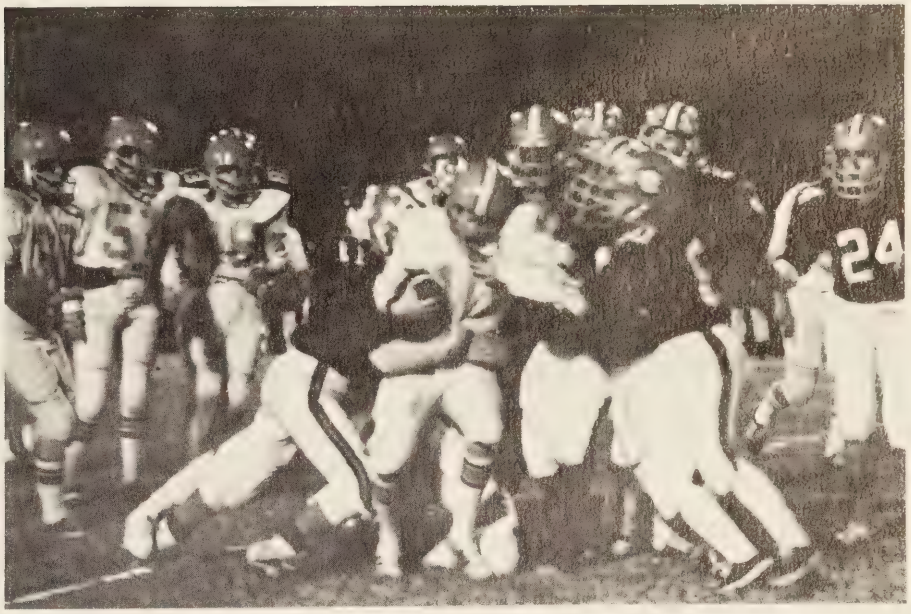


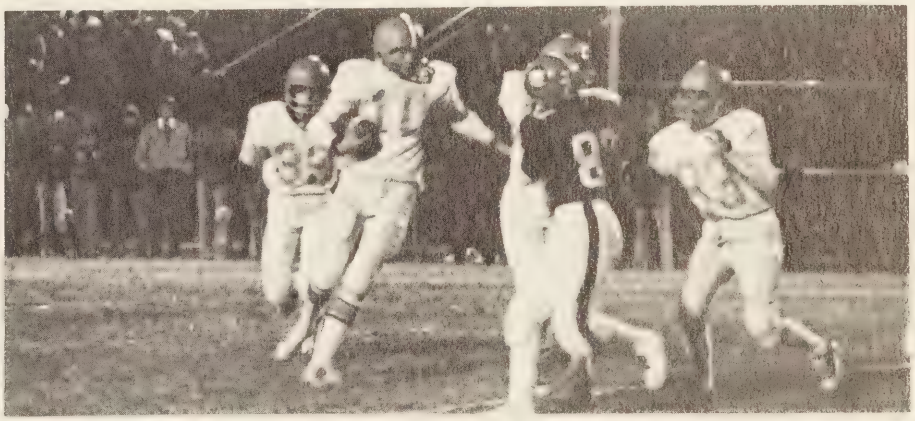
The Powder Puff is a Senior money-raising project involving the Juniors and Seniors. It is a time for members of the two classes to get together for, perhaps, the only time during the year. They practice together, work together, and have fun together.

The girls, taught by their ever-patient male coaches, learn quite a bit about the mysterious game called football. "Don't attack the other team until the ball has left the ground" is but one example of what the coaches were heard teaching the girls. Other instructive techniques include: trying not to tackle from the neck above, making the ball carrier fumble but at the same time being sure the carrier is not one's own teammate, and, at half time, knowing that entertainment provided is for spectators only, "players to the locker room."

It is assumed that the spectators did a double-take upon seeing the oddly apparalled cheerleaders. Satisfying their curiosity, they discovered that these so called "cheerleaders" were actually harmless young Junior and Senior males.

Observing the reciprocal roles portrayed by the students, many onlookers noticed how emphatically the spirits of the classes of '75 and '76 enveloped the entire event.





Upper Left — "Worsesome" Worsley anxiously gazes at the clock as the last few seconds of the first half tick steadily away.

Upper Right — Everyone gets into the act as the fierce Senior defense drags "Lock 'em up" LaMotte to the ground.

Middle Right — "Lock 'em up" La Motte brushes past Senior defense for a twelve yard gain.

Right — Fighting the agony of pain, "Soda" desperately comforts her finger.

"Act well your part, there all the honor lies." The hard work of all the theater artists who followed this, the motto of the International Thispian Society, last year, has resulted in the expansion of the dramatics program.

Last spring Churchland was granted a charter for Troupe 598 of the International Thespian Society. Ten students were inducted into this honorary club which operates on a point system. The Thespian Troupe serves as the core of the drama club.

In addition to the Thespian Troupe there is a dramatics class in which students learn the fundamentals of theater and help with the productions of the plays by the drama club.

For the first time, prospective members had to try out before being admitted to the club. Twelve students were admitted through the tryouts in mid-September. Other students could enter by working backstage for a play.

The Drama Club opened its 1974-1975 season in December with the stage play, I Remember Mama. Later in January the combined forces of the Vocal Music Department and Drama Club produced Oklahoma. The Drama Club followed with three one-act plays and finally the Senior Class play.

The backstage preparations for Catherine Randells proved to be as hectic as her onstage performance as the aunt.

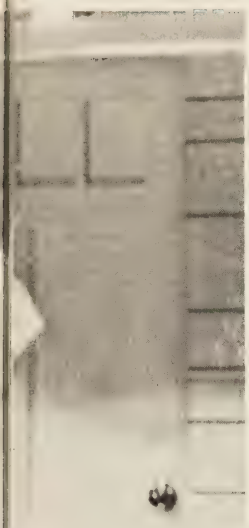
NING



The first act production number, "Many A New Day" showcased Sherry Kidd and the Girl's Ensemble.

Realizing the fact that "she cain't say no," Ricky Williams steals a kiss from Ado Annie played by Barbara Kersey.

Accepting roses as a farewell gift, Susan Tomoscovich graciously takes the bouquet from Clemmy Reagan at the Christmas Concert.

Through a setting of haystacks and surries, Mrs. Brady and Mrs. Buckley successfully portrayed Oklahoma to an audience who was spellbound with scenes of comedy, tragedy and melodrama. The musical, written by Rodgers and Hammerstein, tell of a small mid-western town in the early 1900's. The production displayed the conflicts of love and willing rivals for a country maiden's hand. The co-operation of the music and drama departments was co-ordinated very well, as the January production required much overtime by the main parts as well as the stage chorus.

As always, the music department truly demonstrated the old slogan that "shows must go on." In addition to the musical, they performed at various civic activities and the school Christmas show. They revived the tradition of singing at football games.

Describing the music department would be totally incomplete without mentioning the band. Its members were involved with the arrangements on both a music sheet and football field. Richard Dill and his marching band often assisted the cheerleaders in raising spirit. Playing vigorously on their instruments, band members found entertaining at pep rallies, as well as at football games, united the liveliness of the fans.

Under - The - Hill Gang

Richie Babbitt and the Student Cooperative Association sought to regenerate its position in school affairs. Before beginning their plans a delegation of S.C.A. officers, advisors, and other students attended the Old Dominion Leadership Workshop and returned with lively plans for the year.

Socially, the S.C.A. sponsored postgame "sock-hops," the Christmas Holly Ball, several holidays, and spirit buses to away football games. A mock election and political assembly were conducted in October for the Fourth District Congressional races; representatives from the three candidates spoke in a forum explaining the positions of their candidates.

The Homecoming activities — parade through Churchland, alumni banquet, spirit links, float entourage, assembly, game activities, et.al. — were also coordinated by the S.C.A. (See pages 48-51).

To help finance these events, the used book sales, supply store, and other fundraising means were tried. Any profits and donations were divided between the United Fund, Joy Fund, Va. Lung Association, and March-of-Dimes.

Becoming relevant in the school was a goal of the council in student affairs. Starting by investigating the often-griped-about cafeteria situation, the council tried to alleviate some of the problems within the school. The S.C.A. initiated the first City Wide Student Council Workshop where all five Portsmouth high schools met to find solutions to mutual problems. Later, having been recognized for its initiative in this area, several attempts were made at influencing school board policies of pertinent consequence to the student.

Before the Mock Election Assembly, SCA President Richie Babbitt gives Chris Connelley the final agenda for the speakers.

Richie Babbitt plans mass streak for Senior Day, as he proceeds to explain to the SCA homeroom-representatives.

LITERARY MAGAZINE

The Write Track

The Literary Club's main activity was the production of its first literary magazine. Composed entirely of student work, the illustrated magazine was intended to provide an extensional outlet for students with creative writing or drawing ability. To spark student interest, Mrs. King, sponsor, and club members sponsored a contest so students could show their skills in prose, poetry, and art work. The contest provided the staff with the quality material needed to produce the magazine. The literary work came out in the spring.

The success of the magazine has been the catalyst for a new creative writing class. The class will draw much student interest, help to develop latent talents, and, hopefully, provide the new magazine quality writing.

Intriguing literature and a relaxed atmosphere provide Tommy Gilikin and Janice Newman with a fascinating discussion.

The dedication exemplified by Mrs. King throughout the year genuinely influenced her students and staff.

A Lasting Tradition

The Trucker Topics, our school newspaper, is a continuous publication which began in 1954 as an extracurricular activity. William M. Holbrook has sponsored the school tradition since it was born. In the past, interested students spent time after school and on Saturdays working on the paper. The activity was eventually transformed into a sixth period Journalism class taught by Mr. Holbrook.

The twelve-member staff wrote stories, conducted interviews, counted type, and spliced articles in preparation of the newspaper. They managed to boost subscriptions over last year's mark. Despite late publication of the October and November editions, the staff bounced back with timely publication of the remaining six issues. As in years past, the newspaper covered a wide range of school activities and carried interesting editorials, letters-to-the-editor, humorous gossip columns, several cartoons, and an "In My Humble Opinion" column.

Staff members confer with Mr. Holbrook about a possible article for their next publication.

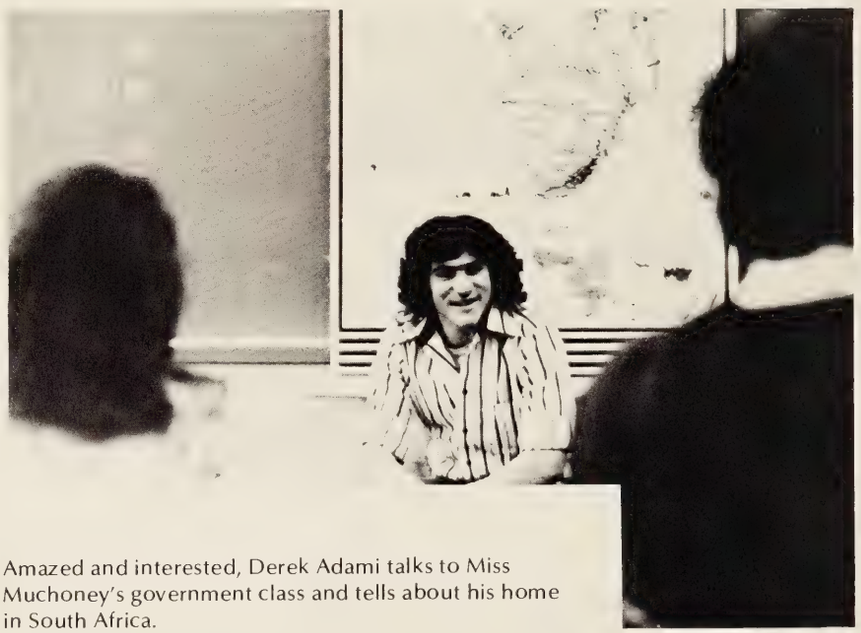
A.F.S.

MINIATURE U.N.



Amazed and interested, Derek Adami talks to Miss Muchoney's government class and tells about his home in South Africa.

With dictionaries and cameras in hand, six people arrived in Churchland on February 2. They were not just ordinary people, but students from all over the world. Sponsored by A.F.S., (American Field Service) the foreign students met and rapped with CHS about their own native customs. The "U.N." in miniature included representatives from Brazil, France, Iran, Japan, South Africa, and Sweden.

A.F.S., whose primary interest is its student-exchange program abroad, planned activities such as an International Dinner. To attend the function, the admission ticket was a dish from any foreign country. A talent show and a dance also were part of the busy week of February 2-8.

Although A.F.S. has not been as popular to the student body as its members have wished, with the help of Debbie Wetherby, enthusiasm was sparked. Announcement of the upcoming activities at an assembly and an explanation of A.F.S.'s purpose served to promote a better understanding of the Chapter potential for service.

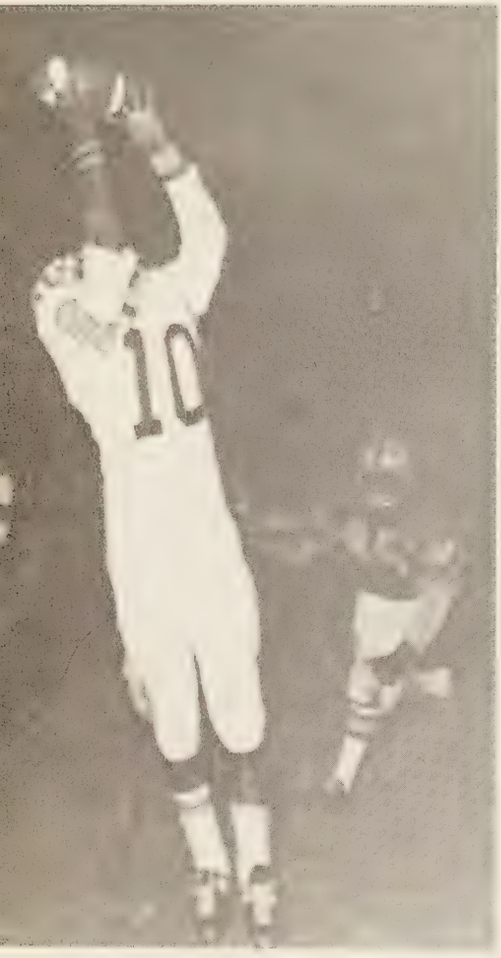
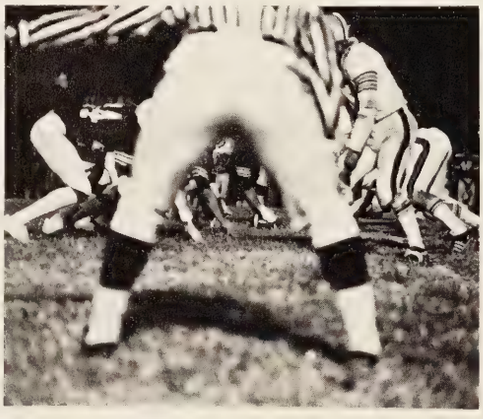
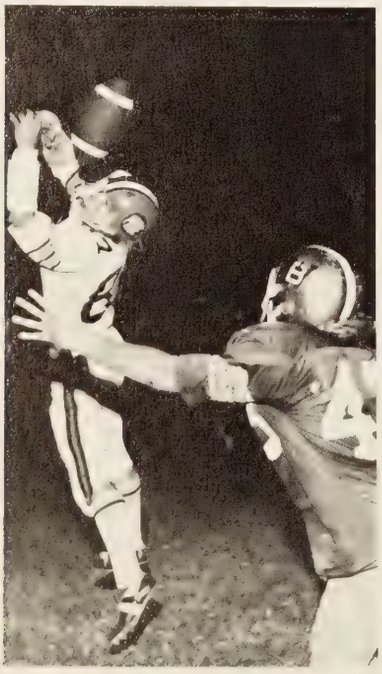
For a majority of students, athletics was an important phase of school life. Students were offered participation in an extensive sports program, with numerous opportunities for both sexes. Rigorous training, sheer determination, and a competitive spirit combined to make a rewarding season.

FOOTBALL

Easy Does It







Football

Football is not all blood and guts, not all fame and glory. It's a happy medium, if you're a winner. Churchland High School placed a winner on the gridiron for public display this season.

The real beneficiary of a winning team is the student spectator. The student doesn't have to go to practice 5 hours on a summer day for 3 weeks prior to school. The student doesn't go through breathswiping agility drills and sprints, and drills, and drills. Tired? Even the thought is.

No, students, you needn't venture out of your safe homes on a rainy Oct. day — unless you play football. In that case you simply tell Mom to hold dinner because you will have had your fill of mud and rain delights.

A student wins when the team wins. The student body profits from a team win. This year has seen a tremendous rejuvenation of school spirit, a missing link in recent years. Is it a wonder that it centered around our winning football team?

Retrospection

What exactly does it take to win football games? This year Churchland did it with one of the most well-balanced efforts seen in the high school ranks. Each of the 22 positions was well-manned. There was no weakest link. In looking back, one should not begin with the first game, but rather the preceding spring. Prior to Aug. 12, 1974, football was voluntary. The season which ended Nov. 15, began last March. Lifting weights is a dull, slow process. Discouragement is easy to come by, but despite lack of visible results, it strengthens, coordinates, disciplines. It is a necessary ingredient in turning out quality football players. As the weather warms, on alternate days some players go through the self-imposed misery of agility drills. These coordinate and sharpen the reflexes. Finally summer comes, and its "play" time. During the first two months of summer are held occasional play — learning sessions. Those "chalk talks" are just as important as hitting. Then the dreaded day comes when some 40 aspirants struggle from a comfortable bed at 7:30 to make it to school by 8:00.

The first few days are conditioning and going through the motions of the plays. Then the fun starts — hitting. Every football player enjoys hard hitting, except when it knocks into his head the realization that he could be at the beach soaking up the late summer sun, really enjoying the final days before school. Sure practice is tough, and a few guys quit, but the devoted player will have trained himself to look at each drill, each day of practice as a necessary ingredient in the accomplishment of one goal — namely, a winning football season.

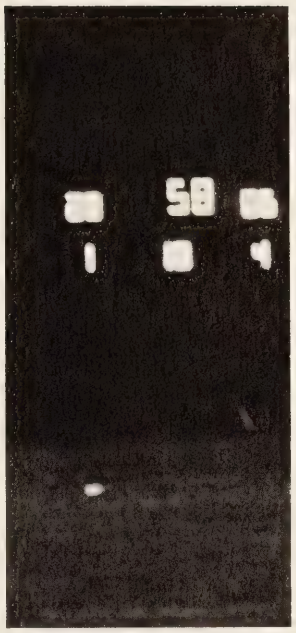
Results

After all the preparations, previously mentioned, the team was prepared to take on the Manor Mustangs, a school Churchland has yet to beat in football. The score was 8-7. We were on the short end. Their touchdown was a fluke, and we outplayed them in every aspect of the game. A note should be inserted here: Churchland football has traditionally been a slow starter; like a precision machine, it requires proper warming up. Therefore, the team which whipped Cradock, 34-0, on the last game of the season was not the same team that "lost" to Manor, 8-7.

The truckers were soundly beaten really, only once, 29-16, by the District champions, Norcom. We were also beaten by Great Bridge, but just barely. Some wins of special interest were: the third win in a row against Wilson, 26-6; the tough, last-minute win over arch rival Western Branch to recapture the Friendship Bowl; the tense field goal by Jeff Woods with 3 seconds left to beat Oscar Smith, 15-14; finally, the four touchdowns by freshman thrill Jake Sumner in the 34-0 romp over Cradock.



As a team the Truckers were a cohesive, balanced unit. Opponents could not play for a pass in a given situation, or a run in another. The offense, which averaged 19 points a game, utilized such plays as the halfback option and the old flea-flicker.The team defense was one of the stingiest in the area, allowing a little under 10 points a game. Individually, Ricky Davis was selected Lineman of the Year, All-District at two positions, and All-Metro. Also All-District were Barry Faulks and Jeff Woods.

Losing several experienced players, the girls on the basketball team confronted numerous obstacles during the season. With only two returning starters, the team practiced vigorously weeks before the season began on September twenty-third.

The Truckerettes were victorious in their first six games; their first loss was to Wilson, the eventual district champs. Their other losses were to Indian River, who became the Regional champs, and to Norcom, in a sloppily played, poorly refereed game. The girls met the Norcom team again in a district playoff for fourth place. Playing their best game of the season, the Truckerettes advanced to the district tournament by a score of 55-25. Churchland lost in the semi-finals to undefeated Wilson, in a very close, hard-fought game.

These games were surprisingly rough, a fact contributing to many of the injuries incurred. A dislocated knee, a broken wrist, a broken finger, a sprained ankle, and unending minor injuries hindered the performances of the team.

The Truckerettes "building" year proved to be a good one. With the coaching of Ms. Judith Glisson and Ms. Debbie Leigh, the future of the girls' basketball team looks bright.

"The enjoyment of playing on the team centered not only around basketball but also around the friendships made." — Y.A.F.S.

Cross Country is certainly the least heralded of any of the sports at Churchland. What, then, motivates the harriers to go out each day and run their four miles in practice or the grueling 2.6 mile course at Tidewater Community College? One of the top runners, Tommy Gillikin, answered this very simply: "I just enjoy running." He also felt that this was a consensus opinion. Cross country is merely a sport of self-determination and personal pride. Coach Tate can only supervise; he can't crack a whip at the runners' heels everyday. The part of the story which makes it all seem in vain at times is that there is absolutely no school support. It is an individual effort with no outside recognition except self-satisfaction. The team has no funds, per se, with which to work. Only uniforms and sweats are loaned out.

The team this fall won only once — against Norcom, and the team was carried through the season by Tommy Gillikin and Ed Townsley. On the lighter side: possible the climax of the year occurred when a team member was caught by campus guards climbing the Frederick water tower. School officials were called, but the result was only red faces.

The basketball season, which began November 1 with guarded optimism and high expectations, ended in relative frustration. From the outset it was realized that inexperience would be a major obstacle, yet it was hoped that with four non-seniors in the starting line-up mere game experiences would be enough to alleviate this problem early in the season. Coupled with that foreseeable problem came others, namely: inconsistent shooting, lack of rebounding, and unpolished ball-handling. The Truckers, however played excellent defense during most of the games as they have in past years.

All of the hurdles were not just technical inabilities. Mental and emotional preparation are as necessary to winning as physical ability. As Coach Griffin stated, "Winning is contagious." If the team wins initially, then the players condition themselves in terms of winning. Yet through "master scheduling" (which pairs teams on the basis of the previous year's finish), the Truckers were pitted against four of the five top teams in the district at the season's start but were beaten soundly only once. As a result of crucial losses to Oscar Smith in the first game and to Wilson and Cradock just prior to Christmas break, the players began to develop somewhat of a negative attitude, not because they lacked confidence, but because it naturally seeps in to a person's mind at times like that. The fact that there didn't develop any spark to rekindle spirits certainly took its toll in later games.

Generally speaking, the defense came from the backcourt, and the offense from the front line. The guards, Wendell Goodwyn and Johnny Crafford seldom had more than fifteen points between them in a game, yet their steals, deflected passes, and ability to thwart the opponent's offense out front were invaluable to the team. The forwards, James Key and Gehrig Self, provided the most firepower, yet each was of a different style. James Key was the driving type, who made his own plays go. Though his style maybe was unorthodox, he consistently came through. His rebounding, too, was a nice surprise, although his 6'1" frame was normally smaller than other forwards. Gehrig Self was perhaps the best pure shooter on the team and was more noted for his long jump shots. He often provided streaks of shooting in the clutch, which served to spark the team. Dino Johnson, a sophomore averaged in double figures in rebounding and scoring while playing under pressure from both teammates and coaches at the center position. The one thing that kept Dino from being the outstanding player everyone expected him to be was his lack of confidence in his own abilities.

During the season there were bright spots to be found. Besides the fact that four starters and most of the team will return, the J.V. team showed promise against some good competition. Barry Wright, an eighth-grader, played excellently and was recognized by his coach as being the best prospect he had seen at Churchland. The season which began with hopes, ended with hopes for the future.

CHURCHLAND SENDS EIGHT WRESTLERS TO REGIONAL TOURNAMENT! Following the Southeastern District Tournament held at Indian River, the Truckers sent eight wrestlers on to the Regionals at Princess Anne. Churchland had two district champions this season: Neil Wilson wrestling at 98 lbs. and Tim McKinney who worked at 119 lbs. These tournament accomplishments put the finishing touches on a fine 7-3-1 season.

MUSCLES

Why should anyone starve for nine months, run until their shoes wear thin, and suck lemons in order to salivate?

Wilson in his first year of varsity wrestling had a fantastic 11-0 district record. Neil also had claim to the fastest pin in the state for the year. It was a thirteen second pin in the Warwick match. Other exceptional wrestlers included Tim McKinney, captain Robbie Lamm, and sophmore Bobo Ricks.

The team got off to a slow start with an opening season tie to Ferguson and a disappointing loss to Indian River. The Christmas break proved to be the turning point of the season however. Improving steadily through strenuous practices, the Truckers came storming back to deal Oscar Smith their only defeat of the season by a score of 25 to 19. The Truckers proceeded to Wilson, clobbering them by a score of 54 to 6. The wrestlers lost their next match to Great Bridge, the Wildcats later becoming district co-champions. The Truckers rolled over their next five opponents losing the season's finale to Western Branch by a mere three points — 24 to 21. Following the season, the grapplers participated in the Southeastern District Tournament where McKinney and Wilson won individual honors and the team placed sixth over all.

In closing it should be noted that six eligible lettermen were iost due to etiher injuries or personal problems. Coaches John Mounie and Leo Gibbs did an outstanding job with a young team that listed only two Seniors on its roster.

GYMNASTICS

YOUNG, NEW FACES

The gymnastics team saw more action this year and a lot of new faces. The squad had only three returning members, Kim Kitt, Miriam Cox, and Debbie Darley. Although this was a rebuilding year, the squad showed great promise for presenting Churchland with a championship gymnastics team.

Under the coaching of Ms. Debbie Leigh, the girls displayed much enthusiasm as they held many exhausting practices in preparation for their six season matches. The team was largely composed of Sophomores, Freshmen, and 8th Graders from the Junior High. The 8th Graders couldn't compete in competition, but they worked hard and will be a great asset to the team in competition next year.

Many girls improved their gymnastics skills as they attended a gymnastics clinic this past summer at Old Dominion University. The team caught a glimpse of higher competition when they traveled to Robbis High School near Richmond on December 15th to witness an AAV compulsory meet.

Through their will to learn and their persererance at many practices, the gymnastics squad greatly improved their skills. The young team demonstrated vitality and talented.

The girls represented CHS well in the district as they posted one of the strongest teams from Churchland in recent years.

The female athletes started practice March 1st in preparation for their first game which took place on the 24th of the same returning month. The schedule groves to be a large one with 15 games and 10 teams in the district. The team has a strong lineup of 11 returning players on the squad of 18. The girls are expected to participate in the district tournament which took place May 12-13. The team relied on the strong batting of such player as Ann Brown, Cindy Bolling, Susan LaMotte, and Darlene Brittain, and the pitching of Barbara Pyner and Collette Reeves. Overwhelming enthusiasm for their sport marks this group of dynamic players.

Young and enthusiastic describes Churchland's track teams this year, for this season proved to be a rebuilding year for both teams with the majority of the athletes make up of Freshman and Sophomore "trackers," Both girls' and boys' teams had fine new and "old" members with great repetitine potentia.

The boys' '75 track team finds itself with only six returning members, but with the determination of each individual competition the team placed well in the district. The team expected outstanding performance from under-classmen Ed Townsley and Mike Howell and from other senior star Tommy Gillikin who went to state last year as a junior. The boys' team, lacking in experience, but studded with determination anticipated placing well in the district and sending several runners to state.

Thirty young, determined females made up Churchland's '75 girls' track team. The team found itself with only five returning members but a strong field of enthusiastic underclassmen. Led by returnees Lorena Culpepper and Miriam Cox and freshmen, Juliette Riddick, the team had high hopes for the new season with a larger, improved schedule. With a strong field of exceptional athletes composing this year's team. The girls expected to have a very successful season.

GOLF

ATHLETES OF CULTURE

Mike Ryder, Steve Liebler, Vann Hinton, Larry Strickland, Tommy Sykes, Robert Tureman, Keith Matthews, Cliff Forrest.

The golf team, which in the past has been one of the top representatives of Churchland High in scholastic competition, did not break with tradition this spring and again seemed to be the class of the Southeastern District. The team was led again by the somewhat phenomenal sophomore, Steve Liebler, because he was supported strongly by established players from last year, Tommy Sykes, Cliff Forrest, Larry Strickland, and Mike Ryder to name a few, as well as some young newcomers who gave balance and depth to this team.

Golf, which has been questioned as even being a sport, has gained recent prominence on the national scene, and consequently high school golf is getting more recognition and has become established as an important part of high school athletics. Golf at Churchland has brought attention to individuals as well as to the school, and this has too seldom appreciated.

Baseball

Varsity baseball was attempting to overcome its anonymity at Churchland by bringing an accomplished winner onto the field. After finishing second in the district last year, the players felt that this was to be the time when hopes would be realized. Weeks before the season started, at a coaches' meeting, the '75 group was considered the cream of the crop in the Southeastern District. The one major thing in favor of the team was its cohesiveness; most of the guys had known each other for years and had played together since elementary school. The atmosphere helped develop a winning composure. Coach Rhodes was the first to have a good time at practice, but he emphasized that internal problems had to be hashed out if they occurred. Keeping the players honest with each other helped build unity and wins.

The Junior Varsity baseball program has finally, after a couple of years, become well established under the tutelage of Coach Underhill. His own initial reaction to the guys he was working with was one of extreme optimism and he was forced to cut members of last year's squad simply because of the abundance of talent. Both the Varsity and the J.V. alike were looking mostly to pitching as their tickets to success.

TENNIS

ABOVE: In this photo taken by the team's mascot in nearby aquarium, junior Barry Kastner sets up a return shot in practice for the regular season competition. LEFT: It is obvious by this picture that senior player, Ricky Galliford, plays with an intense desire to make every shot count even though it's only a practice. BOTTOM: Trying to decide whether he has returned a winner or not is senior, Bruce Breit, who was tentatively rated the number one spot on the tennis team before the season's inception.

Returning with a majority of last year's team, Tennis finished with its expected excellent season. After an undefeated regular season against the district's other teams, they went on to win the Southeastern District Tournament. In the process, they captured a number of first place victories.

After a controversy over a policy decision concerning a boys' and, also, a girls' team, the season proceeded smoothly with a couple of girls playing Varsity.

Before the season began, three female tennis players, Cindy Bolling, Susan LaMotte, and Amy Scarr conversed with Jimmy Connors, the world's No. 1 male tennis player, and, talking about the aforementioned controversy, he wrote the following note: "To whom it may concern: I think it would be in the best interest for both the women and men athletes if there were separate teams. It has nothing to do with being equal; only that more athletes are interested in competing will be able to play. Hope everything works out. J. Connors."

Organizations were, as always, an integral part of CHS, but while freshmen rushed into new groups, seniors extended their circles in realization that soon their ties would be broken. Ranging from charm and grace to "hell nights," organizations were a necessary part of our education. They provided an outlet for energy, exchange of ideas, exposure to people, and best of all — friendships.

Art Club

Getting together in the morning and working at least one period a day, the members made the decorations for the annual alumni dinner at Homecoming. Having been drawn with a three-dimensional effect, the colorful cartoons enlightened the atmosphere with the frolics of Dennis the Menace.

With the artistic talents banning together in a good thought session, the members decided on several themes for bulletin boards pertaining to the United Fund, Open House, and College Night. Probably the most outstanding project that some of the members of the group did was to replace the paintings of the cardinals in the lunchroom to a more vibrant and pleasant enviroment. Through hard work and diligence, the group finally achieved this high goal.

Spirit of '75

"Seniors are the best!" screamed many enthusiastic Seniors at the pep rallies. This new group led by Cathie Covington, was formed last summer in hopes to unite the Seniors in school spirit. At the same time the motive of the club as a whole was to promote spirit at all intrascholastic functions. In order to present the Seniors of the club a formal Senior Banquet in May, the group voiced their ideas and came up with several original money-making projects. The group sponsored an American Graffiti dance awarding the best-dressed a prize. Furthermore, they sold doughnuts and hot chocolate to the faculty and students before school. They wrapped up with a Teacher's Talent Show which marked a new role in CHS teaching.

Embarrassment is the name of the game in the Monogram Club during pledging. Nine girls pledged for this club. Having to wear the same dress, bobby socks, and dress shoes for a week was the main requirement. Furthermore, their attire was complimented by not being allowed to wash their hair. This was all clearly demonstrated by posing for a picture which appeared in the Pictorial.

Making all of this seem worthwhile, all nine girls received jackets for the first time in two years.

Club Aids Family

The Pierette Club consisted of Senior girls, some of whom last spring were chosen by the 1974 Seniors. Last fall more Seniors were chosen. Under the leadership of the president, Dawn Lewark, the club had busied itself with several worthwhile projects. The Pierette Club sponsored a needy family for Thanksgiving and made a generous contribution to the Joy Fund for Christmas.

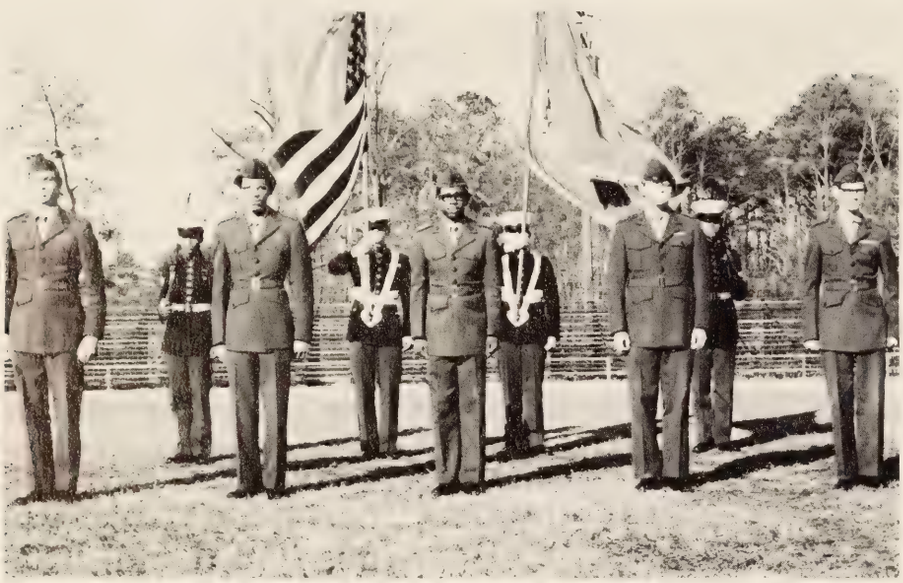
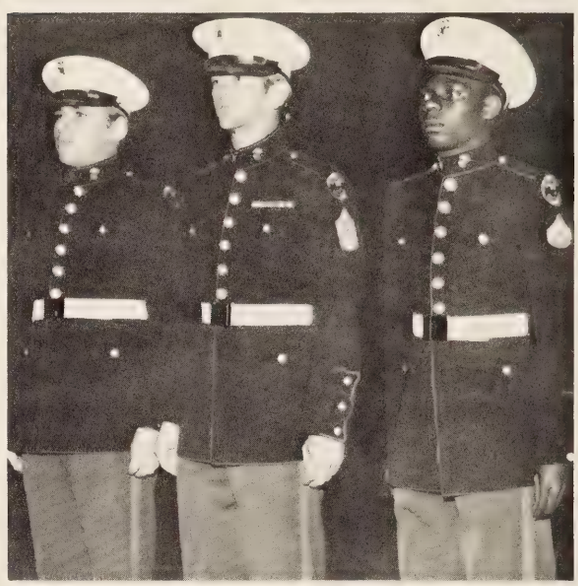
Marine Corps Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps

Now in its sixth year at Churchland, the J.R.O.T.C. Cadet Corps is organized as a company. It functions under the cadet officers and the Marine instructors. This year is unique since the girls became eligible for membership in the cadet corps.





Standing at full attention, John Runyon, Jerry Dempsey, and Michael Adams await further instructions while in formation at a football game.

Senior Marine Instructor Colonel Max C. Chapman, U.S.M.C., Retired, Assistant Marine Instructor First Sergeant B.G. Tate, U.S.M.C., Retired.

Differing from past years, the Band was given two class periods of instruction. Mr. Dill helped each student increase his playing ability. The first period Band was given further experience in musical involvement, while the second period Band received more individual attention on their particular instruments.

The Band played at seven halftime shows during Football season which, incidentally, was an increase over last year. They also participated in the Marching Band Competition held at Indian River. The Band participated in a chain of events including a Festival in March, the Spring Concert in May, the Memorial Day Parade, and Churchland's Graduation ceremony.

Standing straight and tall like a soldier, Mr. Richard Dill begins to direct the band in playing the Alma Mater during the Homecoming game.

Marshals

Representing the school as hosts and hostesses at various functions is the duty of a marshal. Twenty juniors were chosen for the honor in an assembly in October.

These impressive juniors began their calendar of responsibilities by guiding helplessly confused parents at Open House. The marshals fulfilled their roles expertly at "I Remember Mama" and at "Oklahoma." At the end of the year they efficiently assisted at graduation and baccalaureate exercises.

Being able to meet people publicly is an essential attribute of a successful marshal. Considerate, polite, and displaying good character, the marshals were an asset to school events.

Seated — Jack Johnson, Nancy Taylor, David Eich, Clarence Harrison, Smoky Jackson, Nancy Murray, Susan LaMotte, Patricia White, Tommy Webb, Greg Abbott, Billy Pierce. National Honor Society

The National Honor Society at Churchland has probably been considered pretty much a "do-nothing" group a notoriety hard to live down. The members of this year wanted to get away from this dubious reputation as well as the restrictions which the purpose of the society imposed. Initially the members, expecially some of the officers, were anxious to become a type of political action group, which would attempt to increase student participation in the administration end of the school system, uncover the reasoning behind some of the policies, and generally to serve as a type of student protection agency. However, as often happens, the inceptive favor behind this idea wore off and the society concentrated on more normal activities: dues collection, service at the Homecoming dinner, and formation of committees to make things easier.

The Honor Society decided against sponsoring money for a scholarship this year. This is a reflection of the unfun which money-making projects bring to members of any club. The new look has been enhanced by the new sponsor, Miss Muchoney.

Churchland Tri-Hi-Y

Winning first place and twenty-five dollars for their Homecoming float, Churchland Tri-Hi-Y definitely started out on the right foot. A pajama party was held to celebrate Homecoming. Besides this one, several more were given; one in honor of the new members chosen in September.

Many of the group's activities consisted of selling doughnuts inumerable times, choosing bunny sisters at Easter, running the coat check at dances, sending several members to the Model General Assembly in Richmond, and finally they ended the list with a memorable Mother-Daughter Banquet. In May, Churchland Tri-Hi-Y sponsored the glamorous and exciting Miss Churchland contest which is held annually. The proceeds from this contest helped finance the yearly beach trip in the summer.

After choosing their new officers, Webb Tri-Hi-Y selected new members who were guests of honor at a pajama party shortly afterwards. These new members were forced into an unrelenting initiation during which they dressed up in rolled-up pants, wore crazy socks, hats, boots, and even wigs for a full week. On initiation night, the new members of the group dressed up once more, raided Burger King and sang, "Hold the Pickles! Hold the Lettuce . . ." Onward with their travels, they came to McDonald's displaying themselves in an abnormal manner. When the group finally got down to more serious business, they appointed representatives to attend the District Conference, held a bake sale and collected canned goods for needy families.

Back Row — Teri Burke, Molly Wilkerson, Sharon Lewark, Elizabeth Manser, Keith Davis, Laura Clark.

With the rise and fall of another school year, members of Connie Hemby Tri-hi-y got together early to work on money-making projects. A special committee was called in order that newer, more original ideas could be reached. They held several bake sales which were quite successful. A needy family received support from the girls at Christmas.

After the new officers were elected in the spring, the annual Mother-Daughter Banquet was held in order to install them. Ending a busy year, the girls relaxed at the beach for a week.

In keeping with the tradition of the tri-hi-y's, Perrecta Tri-hi-y entered a float in the Homecoming parade and gave a Thanksgiving basket to a needy family. Also, being ecology minded, they collected bottles and cans for ECOS.

During the year, they engaged in other activities such as the selling of baked goods and stationery. The club also sent two members to the District Conference and then sent four representatives to MYA.

Cem Tri-Hi-Y

"Helping those less fortunate than yourself" was the motto of Cem Try-Hi-Y. This was clearly displayed during the Thanksgiving season when they liberally contributed canned food to a family in Cradock. Also for Christmas, Cem Tri-Hi-Y contributed food, a dollar from each member for presents, plus any used but good games or toys to another family. Another family was fortunate in receiving some badly needed furniture, since their house burned early last summer.

Enjoying the amenities of life, Mike Drum silently rests in study hall.

Trucker Hi-Y

Trucker Hi-Y, a resourceful group, got off on the right foot with a second place prize from the float in Homecoming. This spark of incentive pushed the group to greater things. The selling of candy bars, which is a reverse from fire extinguishers, aided in the beach fund; yes, of course, the beach fund. From the earned money the group went to Virginia Beach for pure rest and relaxation in the summertime.

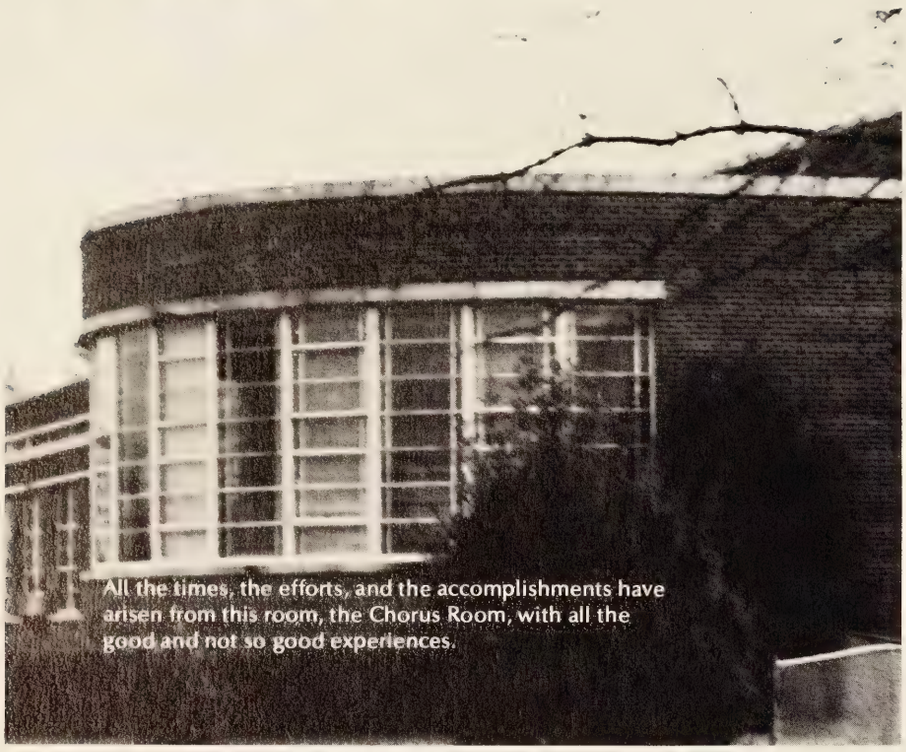
Having increased its membership by five members, Liebler bravely embarked on a new year, again determined to make it to that summery haven, The Beach. The action started with the traditional pledging of new members, and continued with such beach-hopeful efforts as selling doughnuts in January (the old favorite), selling candy hearts for the Valentine's celebration, and sponsoring a dance. Not all of the activities were solely for the purpose of raising money. There was fun also: a reasonable facsimile to Christmas caroling on December twenty-third; a challenge basketball game with Trucker Hi-y; and finally, The Beach. The year was filled with more activity than anyone would associate with a hi-y. The year was labeled, Successful!

The Chorus



All the times, the efforts, and the accomplishments have arisen from this room, the Chorus Room, with all the good and not so good experiences.

Under the direction of Mrs. Fae Buckley, the Mixed Chorus, Villagers, and the Girls' groups performed for several civic and church groups in the Tidewater area.

Fall activities included a Lancaster "Sing-Along" with other local high schools, two football half-time shows, the Junior Miss Pageant, and some musical presentations for the Junior Marshal Assembly.

By the time Christmas holidays arrived, all were in the mood, since they had presented programs for many groups in Portsmouth, Norfolk, and on the Peninsula. These programs included the Tree Lighting Ceremony at Tower Mall, an Assembly program, and a concert, "The Sounds of Christmas," presented with the Churchland High School Band. In addition, they enjoyed singing for the Christmas presentation at the Manor High School Planetarium. During this busy time, auditions were held for the cast of "Oklahoma!"

Having returned to school after the holidays, the Chorus caught up right away with preparations for "Oklahoma!" All Regional Chorus, and exams. What a hectic and busy time for them all. Somehow everything fell into its place and they presented three preformances of "Oklahoma!" Two weeks, later, many chorus members represented Churchland High School in the All Regional Chorus, which was an enriching and rewarding musical experience.

The spring opened with some sacred concerts in local churches, and preparing for our exchange programs with the choral students from James Wood High School in Winchester, Virginia. These activities, along with preparations for Spring Concert and Baccalaureate, kept them working hard to improve, and still have fun. We were proud to have students from our Chorus represent Churchland in the All Virginia Chorus, held in Northern Virginia in April. Last but not least, the Vocal Department recorded an album which will help them remember many of the songs they have learned from the past.

During the Yuletide season, the Latin Club celebrated with a Saturnalia Festival. Santa Claus made his early debut, handing out gifts to all. Afterwards the scholars played games including the name game, the rubber band roll-over-your-nose game, going on a lion hunt, and they sang songs. With the oncoming of spring, the club put on an elaborate banquet. They feasted on ambrosia and on other sparkling and tasty fruits.

Mr. Gatling ponders the possible entrance in the Miss Truckerette contest.

Enticing French dishes and other scrumptious delights opened the French Club banquet in the spring. The members, having installed new officers, delved in such French greats as Crepes Suzettes and Souffles. Life is at its best in this French-American Delicatessen. Likewise at Christmas, Le Cercle Francais relived the traditional French custom of placing gifts inside the shoes of others.

The group sponsored a contestant in the Miss Truckerette contest. The lovely and sexy Robert Nelms assumed the position in the affair. The club remarked simply, "You deserved to win, Rob!"

Spanish Culture Expands

Jam-packed pinatas, soon-spilling and tossing candies across the floor, marked the festive Christmas season for the Spanish Club. Traditionally all participants thronged near the pinatas while one person at a time proceeded to attack it with a large stick. Following this, the pinatas exploded. All were able to feast on these zestful Spanish delights, because the members worked together and brought different foods. Likewise, the annual Awards Banquet in May featured basically the same cuisine. These main events focus upon the further appreciation for the advancement of Spanish culture.

Accompanied by Ms. Iris Cooper, the Spanidh Club ventured to Chrysler Hall to hear such Spanish greats as Segovia, probably one of the most talented guitar players living today. His music display is a true tribute to the Spanish civilization. The Spanish Club also went to O.D.U. to programs sponsored by the Club Hispanoamericano de Tidewater.

"¡ Gracias a Dios! Hoy is viernes."

DECA at Work

In the fall, DECA members prepared treats for all the teachers on Halloween, and sponsored a rock concert which helped to present the "Employer-Employee Banquet" scheduled for May. In addition to this, three Thanksgiving baskets were given to a needy family. The name of the family was furnished by the Social Service Department. Along with the canned food brought in by each member, the club bought a turkey, ham, cakes, pies, and fruit to add to the baskets.

As a tribute to the Christmas holidays, a reception was prepared for the Guardian Care Old Age Home. Sweets as well as fruits were served. Frank McClenney, a D.E. student, entertained by playing his guitar.

A DECA Sweetheart contest was held on Valentine's Day. The student body voted by contributing money to the candidate of their choice for DECA Sweetheart. All proceeds went to the Heart Fund.

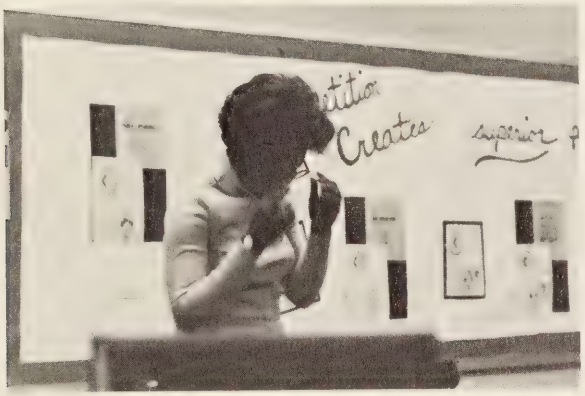
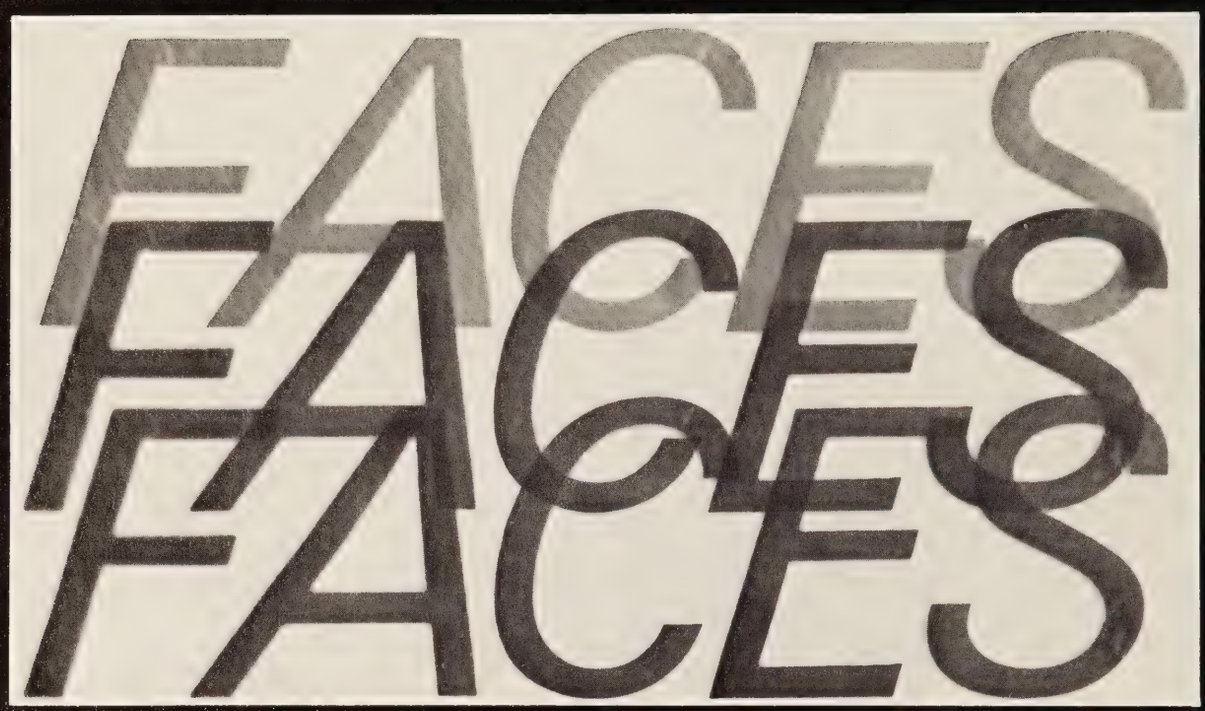
Students in a division of the Vocational and Industrial Clubs of America (VICA) have been a dynamic group. They conducted outstanding money-raising projects to finance their trip to Walt Disney World in Florida. The fund-raising included the sponsoring of dances, car washes, and bake sales. Also, the members managed to attend the annual VICA Nags Head Convention where they learned about leadership, publicity, and forming a club. Following the convention, students and teachers joined in a festive dance in the social hall of the Ramada Inn. Celebrating Christmas with the usual spirit, members of VICA got together and attended the Cavalier Dinner Playhouse. Under the new leadership of Mr. Stan Madson, his fresh, untried ideas for the organization proved to be most productive.



Gesturing hands reveal V.I.C.A. president Priscilla Clemons' total involvement at the podium.

Daryl Mathias — Treasurer, Karen Ziegenhain — Reporter, Nelda Allman — Parlimentarian.



New faces appeared in old places as 310 freshmen joined the ranks of new sophomores, juniors, and seniors for the 32nd time since CHS's doors opened in 1943. Faces often showed spirit, excitement, disappointment or anger. The only thing evident among all students was change — whether it meant a new school environment, new teachers, new friends or new rules.

Retrospect

Things have changed since September '71 when the class of 1975 first entered the halls of CHS. Coming from the new junior high school, we had to get used to being at the bottom. Hailed as a class of "munchkins", some freshmen set out to join every organization in the school while others remained aloof. Thus we began. Four years later we ended our trek but only to begin anew, a major portion of life yet to go.

Between our entrance and our exit at CHS this nation has seen an insignificant apartment complex by the name of Watergate rise from obscurity to a place of international infamy, the homecoming of prisoners of war, the end of American troop involvement in the Vietnam War, the resignation of the top two leaders in the country and the inauguration of a new president. We have experienced fuel crises, runaway inflation, and the threat of a serious recession. Altogether these national crises may have seemed remote from our lives at CHS, yet they undoubtedly left their mark.

?Privileges?

In The Beginning Man created schools. And in the schools Man created little people called students.

Six days had passed (school days of course!). And on the seventh day, before Man rested, a senior said, "There art something missing to separate seniors from munchkins."

Man looked and saw that this was not good. So Man said, "Let there be Senior Privileges." And it was so.

And there was rejoicing in the schools. Until one day the rain came.

It seemeth that seniors, being corruptible as they are, went and tooketh advantage of their privileges. Though it be not all seniors, they all tooketh the punishment.

"Let Senior Privileges be banished from the land," ordered Man. And it was so.

And the Seniors cried out, "It's going to be a long year."

Democracy, an Ideal

Kathy Holbrook contemplates the world in study hall.

Do you believe in all principles of democracy? Yes or No? The American Political Behavior class of Mrs. Short masterminded a survey to categorize the democratic attitudes of Seniors. Thirty-seven students, selected by random sampling, were asked to agree or disagree with statements such as "Atheists should not be allowed to hold public office because of possible disruption;" "If it is obvious that an individual is guilty of a crime, trial by jury should be by-passed;" or "The residents of a neighborhood should be allowed to prevent someone they consider undesirable from moving into the neighborhood." From the data collected, the pollsters discovered that Seniors, although they claim to believe in democratic ideals, actually are hesitant to believe wholeheartedly in the democratic way of life.

"Why me?" Mike Pierce whimpers.

The Guiding Light

If ever you happen to accidentally stumble into the vicinity of the guidance office about a week before report cards go out, and you see a cute little man with baby-blue eyes frantically tearing through the office; fighting his way through piles of computer sheets, you have observed one day in the life of Mr. Benn Griffin. Picked for the glamorous job of finding colleges for students, and then trying to get them admitted, Mr. G. is also seen dribbling the ball in faculty basketball games and showing golfers and basketball players his athletic abilities. At one time or another, before a student graduates from CHS, he gets to know this man either as a guidance counselor, coach, or just as a friend. We, the Class of '75, would like to thank Mr. G. for all he has done for each and everyone of us. THANKS, MR. GRIFFIN!!!

Physics Students Suffer Diaper Rash

"Physics is fun," the slogan of Mr. Rash, is, at one time, both an understatement and an overstatement. While physics students wrangled with impossible problems and uncomfortably close deadlines, they also became involved in several money-making schemes in order to finance a spring trip to Boston to visit M.I.T. and to see a Boston Celtics game. Such items as Rex all-purpose cleaner, stick candies, and T-shirts were sold to an unsuspecting student body. In addition to becoming money-mongers, the budding physicists attended Brigadoon at the Tidewater Dinner Theater in December. In a more serious vein, physics students, with the aid of Mr. Rash and his trusty Harvard Project Physics books, learned a lot through the independent work method and freely structured atmosphere in this course. Who knows, in a few years the world will probably be overrun by calculator wielding physicists whose interest in physics was sparked in CHS laboratories.

Decisions

"Is college for me? If so, which one? If not, which vocation is best suited for me?" Decisions face all high school seniors. Many try to put them off; yet, inevitably they must be settled. For many, these are major decisions which will shape the remainder of their lives. Unlike earlier decisions, these are left entirely to the Senior himself — no one can make them for him. Purposes and goals in life must be re-examined and often formulated. Goals which used to be important now seem minor in comparison to the new ones that must be made.

Flying

Flying . . . flying . . . the days pass quickly; suddenly the calendar reads "September" — the beginning of the end for Seniors; the end of a stage of our lives which started in September of '63. We are frightened when we see in the near future the chance to attain one of our goals — a diploma. It is time to look ahead and see what the future holds; a time to look back and see how we have changed.

Flying . . . flying . . . the days pass quickly; the trees stand naked, the year is halfway over. For some, college applications are sent in and replies are anxiously awaited. While some investigate job opportunities, others consider a hitch in the service. And still others contemplate marriage. Many friends think they know what their futures hold; yet, some wander frantically as if in a maze.

Flying . . . flying . . . the days pass quickly; the trees are buddinr, the year is nearly over. Measurements are made for caps and gowns. Time is passing; yet, we wonder — are we ready to face the world alone? There is no longer time to make a blueprint for the future. The prom comes and goes with all its excitement, frills, and fuss.

Flying . . . flying . . . the days pass quickly; everything is green; graduation day is nearly here. Exams are lurking in the air. We are tired . . . momentarily we close our eyes . . . we open them and it's here; we are standing in line. Where did all the time go? We are only 18 . . . we are too young! Then suddenly it's over; we are no longer Seniors but graduates.

Flying . . . flying . . . the days pass quickly; a new beginning has begun . . .

A beginning...

A MESSAGE TO JUNIORS

It's in your pocket,
It's in the air,
You may not notice,
You may not care.

You may not like it,
It's no choice of yours;
It's inevitable,
So open the doors.

Just take it in stride,
As your foremost friend;

Class Rings: What's your opinion?

Robin Wilder: "They're too expensive! But they're really nice looking."

Cheryl Mason: "Class rings? They're alright. They're too expensive. Do you know that Cathy Markle's ring is about half as much as ours is?"

Vicki Conklin: "I like 'em. Well, they're, you know, you can carry them through the ages."

Sheryl Elmore: "I'm glad we have them. I don't know what to say. They're the rock of ages!"

Mr. Holbrook: "I'm for 'em."

Mike Myers: "They are a very expensive way of remembering one's high school years."

Steve Lewis: "About what? Class rings? I think they're a little on the expensive side."

Gina Lindaur: I never really thought about them."

School Spirit?

Liz Rowland: "Huh? It's a lot better than last year, and the pep rallies, especially second assembly, were fantastic."

Jack Johnson: "Spirit has come a long way since last year, but it still has a long way to go."

David Eich: "School spirit is great until people have to work. For example, the class organization, for the most part, twenty people of the class do the work."

Seth Gilbert: "What is this? Everyone keeps asking me that. It ain't worth a damn. What's this for? You're not going to put that in the annual are you?"

David 'Val': "School spirit? I don't know."

Billy Pierce: "I agree with 'Val.'"

Chris Daughtry: "Huh? It needs help. The junior guys need more spirit. Like when we didn't have any cheerleaders for Powder Puff.

Michelle Carrere: "It could be worse."

. . . an ending

Well, the year is over, and things have changed. You've changed, too. Look at yourself and all of the changes that have taken place. Were you aware of them? Were you a part of them? Could you have done more? Your experiences should guide you in making next year, last year, your best year. The future awaits you, but is there really that much time?

What is There to a Sophomore?

What is there to a sophomore? Is there anything special? Sure, it's our last year taking gym, an upper lowerclassmen, and two more years of school after June, but what is special, different, and exciting? We are told that we're going through a phase. As freshmen, we were naive, young children. Everything was exciting, new, and different. We were just that, freshmen, munchkins. Next year as juniors, things start pepping up. Upperclassmen, class rings, giving the Junior-Senior, and Mr. Mancuso's history class. Seniors seem to have it as a breeze. They realize it is the last year at school. They feel superior and on top of everything, receiving a prom, senior class party, class play and finally the star attraction of the entire production of school, graduation. Is there anything special about being a sophomore?

Is it a bird? a plane? No, it's Super Shoe. Something even the heels of society can wear. A pair is great for stomping in the stands at your favorite Trucker game. Feel ten feet tall and tower over your tiny teachers. Feel superior. Crush that cigarette Miss Murphy is about to catch you with and slaughter the centipedes that are about to attack.

Go out, set your soles free with a new pair of Super Shoes.

Milestones

We're moving up baby! Each new year is ecstasy. Many of us, as sophomores, turn sixteen this year. Sixteen has something beautiful about it. Driver's license! Finally we no longer have to be carted around everywhere. All of our goals seem to be within reach. After we're sixteen, other privileges are bestowed on us. At eighteen, we are "adults," eligible to vote, be drafted, and buy beer, a great age. The next, memorable step, is our twenty-first birthday. The time is one of no strings, out of the hair of parents, and being able to go to the liquor store with no questions about identification cards. We have reached the height of self-responsibility and freedom. We've come a long way, baby!

Caught off guard, John Harrison quickly withdraws from the camera as he goes to cross-country practice.

OOPS, I Lost My Head!

When I walked into Mr. Holbrook's English class for the first time, I expected it to be just like any other English class. The usual half six weeks grammar, half six weeks literature. Found out how wrong I was. I might go into any other class and just read the book. In Holbrook's class I have to read his mind! After taking the literature test, which I failed, I was waiting and praying for the next grammar test to bring up my grades. "Oh hell's bell's! Oops, lost my head."

A game which we play often, studying for literature, is Twenty Questions. Lately we've gotten better at the game than he has. Can you identify: the blonde soda jerk in the restaurant; the bullet in the soldier; the lamp that told the Green Police where Anne Frank was hiding? "If you don't know it now, you'll never remember it!"

At the Oscar Smith game ROTC Gaylord Hines checks the press box to be sure Churchland beat the Tigers 15-14.

No one can fully understand a Churchland High sophomore until he has been in a day of our lives.

I start out like any other individual with the alarm set at 6:45. By 7:00, when Mom has finally gotten me up, I proceed to undertake the skill of getting dressed. After much debate over my clothes, I give up and decide to wear jeans. Rushing to make the bus, I finally realize that there is no turning back.
Upon arriving at school, my locker is disgusted at continuously getting slammed and soon plans to take revenge. Homeroom is next on the agenda. Hearing announcements — and finding out about a geometry pop quiz.

Mr. Holbrook is first in my schedule — take notes — analyze — wet run — dry run — bell!

Next is Ms. Hill's geometry class. My friends were right. She is giving a pop quiz. What is Euclid's Fifth Postulate? Prove line one is parallel to line two if angle two is congruent to angle seven. "Greg, were we supposed to read the next Latin story? What!?! Oh gosh! I didn't do it! Do you think he will call on me? No, I didn't read yesterday. Maybe I should confess my unpardonable sins. There goes the usual ten o'clock Harry cough. Only seventeen minutes left. Greg, help!"

After wasting the entire time hoping for a fire or bomb threat in third period, which didn't occur, I am cautiously tiptoeing into Latin III. Vocabulary, thank goodness I know that. Perched on his little stool, Mr. Moore asks, "Do I have any volunteers for the story? People that try are my favorite people. Max, good. Cindy will help you if you get stuck." Whew, I got through this paragraph, but can I make it through four more withmut a nervous breakdown? Wringing my hands, which have broken out in a cold sweat, fearful that I am to be his next victim, I find looking through the back of the book, staring at the floor and keeping my mouth shut work today. Guess I'd better translate tonight. "Vale."

Walking down the halls, I feel relieved to talk to my friends. Assuring me that I have no reason for heart failure, I amble through the walkway to be greeted by Mrs. DeLoach. She gives me the highpoint of my day with a "C" on my last test. Not too bad I guess.

We sophomores by no means have it easy. After facing all of these traumas, we have to eat lunch in the cafeteria — cafeteria food. Am I glad I brought my lunch! At least I can keep down a bologna sandwich in field hockey. Heading for the locker room that has been infested with cockroaches and dressing out in the latest fashions from Saks Fifth Avenue (gymsuits), we warm up with exercises and roll call. "Out on the hockey field with hockey sticks and once around the goal cage," bellows Mrs. Glisson. After an exhilarating experience with bulleys, goals and corners, it's time to go in. Then returning to our former personalities after portraying star athletes, it's upstairs to typing. Practice, timings (on the control level) and exercises wind up the day. We relinquish our fond memories of dear, beloved school and return home to milk and cookies on . . . days of our lives.

Freshman. . .

The Freshmen Class was determined to make a name for itself, other than "Munchkins," a name bestowed on them by the Seniors. The Class of "78," which is the largest class presently at Churchland, elected very capable officers: Jimmy Goldman as president, Steve Leon as vice president, Hunter Joyner as treasurer and Chris Parrino as secretary. The first effort made by the class as a whole was a newspaper drive to raise money. Under the direction of their officers and class advisors, Mr. Moore and Miss Sawyer, these enthusiastic students brought in hordes of paper every Tuesday morning. If the ninth graders continue for the rest of their high school careers with the same determination and zeal, they could reach heights that would put Churchland High on the map.

The year of the cockroach

Numerous members of a cockroach family have migrated to Churchland High School's locker rooms since September 3, 1974. Much speculation has arisen as to the reason why such a large number of cockroaches would make this transition. The foremost of these questions being — "Why do cockroaches choose our lockerrooms for their new environment?". Carlton J. Cockroach, a prominent member of the Orthoptera Society, offers this explanation: "We chose the CHS locker rooms for our habitat because they possess so many pleasing qualities. These assets include delightful aromas, soothing warmth, protection in both small crevices and gym baskets, and a large food supply comprised of peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, potato chip crumbs, chewing gum and an infinite number of other foods."

These cockroaches plan to lead full and enriching lives. As a result of their wisdom in choosing this environment, their prosperity should be insured, save for the threat of death from Raid — or a greater threat — wholesale slaughter by countless frantic, screaming girls.

Great Expections

Feeling fully prepared after all the years of preparation in Elementary and Junior High Schools, The Freshmen arrived with great expectations on September 3rd. These students felt they could endure High School and all its tribulations — but they did not know about Mrs. Ingersoll's practical application tests. The enthusiastic newcomers were sure that by using rote memorization, their multiplication tables and other study devices they could be extremely successful in Physical Science; however, the thinking required on Mrs. Ingersoll's tests necessitated going the extra mile. Mrs. Ingersoll, who is readily recognized by her red hair, can be quated as saying, "The brain is like a muscle. The more you use it, the stronger it gets." She further insures that all brains under her guidance get plenty of exercise. Now that the members of the Class of "78" have conquered Mrs. Ingersoll's practical application tests, they feel adequate to overcome anything that comes their way — well almost anything.

Freshmen express their feelings toward upperclassmen.

Right: If I wasn't such an ole woman, and you wasn't so young and smart-alecky, why, I'd marry you!" — Diane Workman.

Middle Left; Reveling in his powerful Latin Club consulship, Bruce Robertson gleefully orders a member's execution. Middle: Who knows whose nose that is? Only the nose knows! Middle Right: "Yes, may I help you?" asks Laurie Casto, the budding young secretary.

Intent on her work, Karen Graves toils over tedious annual staff layouts.

Acknowledgements

The Trucker would like to thank Seventeen Magazine and Mr. Alvin Toffler for rights to reprint "Is Your High School Obsolete" in the Student Life Section. We would also like to thank The Virginia-Pilot and Ledger-Star for various pictures of the Congressional Election in the Events Section. We would like to pay tribute to Virginia Federal and Mr. Robert Wentz for permission to use the Virginia Federal Building (downtown office) on the Business Divider. A personal thanks goes to John C. Rayfield, whose attempts and accomplishments, brought considerable change to the 1974-75 staff. Along with the changes in the year, we graciously thank Mr. Ryder, Mrs. Haislip, Mrs. Hatfield, Ms. Cooper, and the Admininstration for helping us in our times of need. In the new section of Fantasyland we would like to thank David Fletcher for all his art work and the time he spent. A great deal of thanks goes to Mr. John Perry for his patience and understanding to a relatively young staff. Thanks goes to Mr. and Mrs. Robertson for that late night place to be during deadlines. We also would like to thank Janet Gilbert who spent her free time helping us with odds and ends.

The Trucker would like to extend a special thanks to Mr. C. Lee Snyder, whose time and efforts for taking pictures will never be forgotten. Mr. Synder, along with many ideas on staff management, produced the first color portraits of the Senior Class in the history of Churchland High School. Again we give much thanks, since his work was the greatest asset to the book. His patience and diligence went beyond the call of his normal duties.

Why should anyone want to work 'til five o'clock after school almost every day of the year, stay up to the wee hours of the night meeting deadlines, sell ads in the blistering heat of the summer, and put their grades and sleep at stake?

You might try asking an annual staff member, that is, almost any staff member. It might be hard for that staffer to answer in simple terms. Because, how could that staffer describe something that offers an outlet to graphics, to business, to photography, to journalistic writing, to an in depth relation with the school and community, and most importantly, to creativity? Of course, a lot of fun is involved, but that is little compensation to the headaches and hassles, especially if you are an editor.

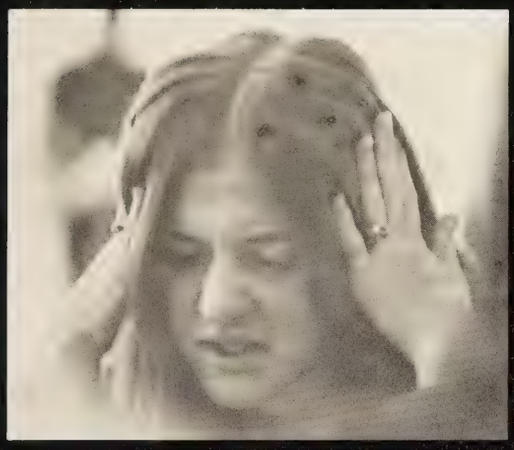
The book's format was quite a challenge. The staff wanted to get across the changes that occuring all around us and, in some cases, changes that, perhaps, should come about. A magazine approach was developed to supplement and enhance this theme. The magazine was to run through student life, events, and sports; a more traditional layout was required for the academic sections. "Fantasyland" was the creation of joining controversy with warped minds to produce gentle poking of fun.

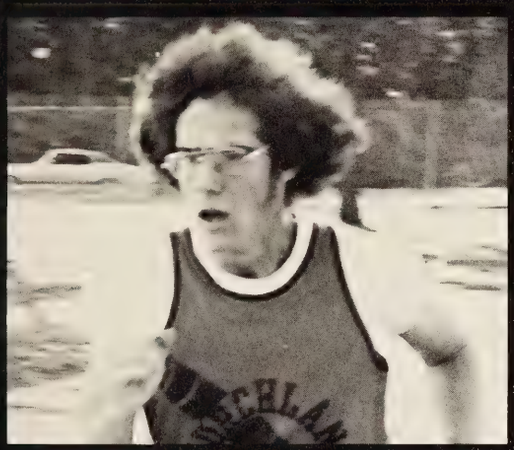
The rather inexperienced staff traveled to Winston-Salem, N.C., and to Charlottesville, Va., to gleen ideas from the best yearbooks and instructors in the country and, above all, to please its customers.

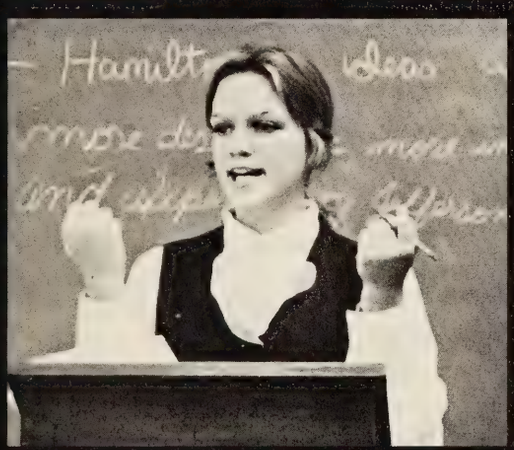
Retrospect

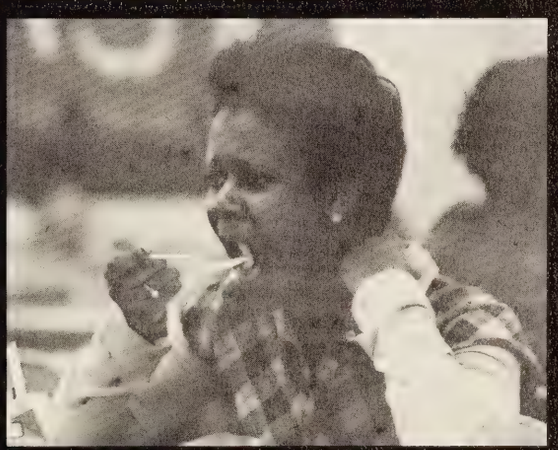
"The nation needs coolness more than clarion calls; intelligence more than charisma; a sense of history more than a sense of histrionics."

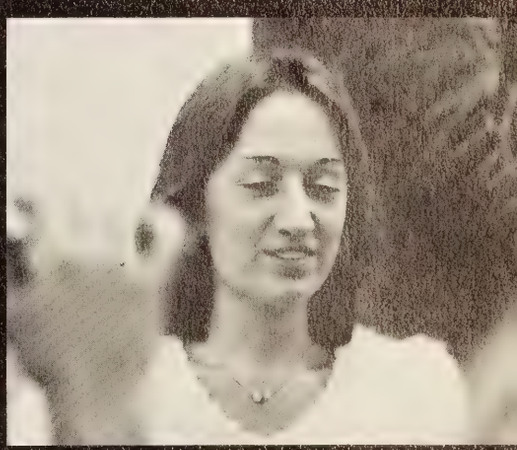
A school at a crossroad as a nation drew a sigh. A year of ever-present confusion and turmoil paved the way for a wild economy and a renewed distrust in government. School started as the nation watched its 37th President forced from office. President Ford entered office, attempting to tackle the nations problems. Hints of recession, rising inflation, wage and price controls, energy shortage, all of which made life seemingly more and more difficult, while several thousand youths flooded into Foreman Field to see and hear Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young.

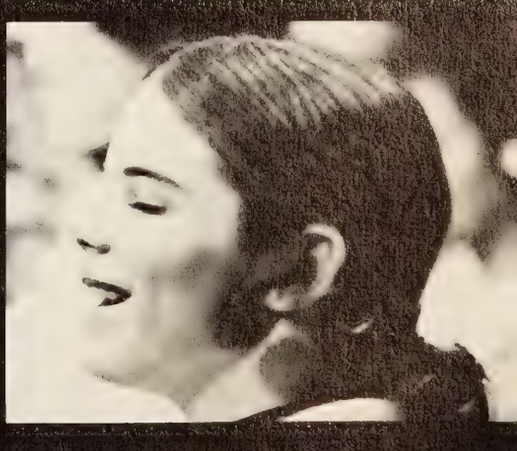


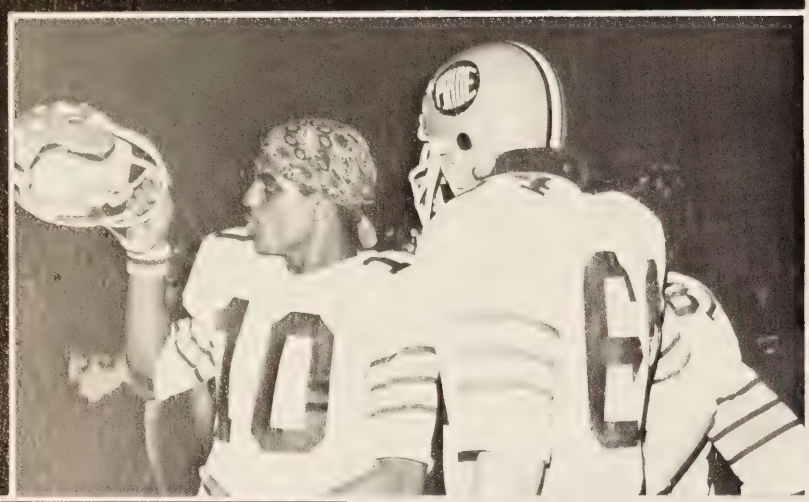


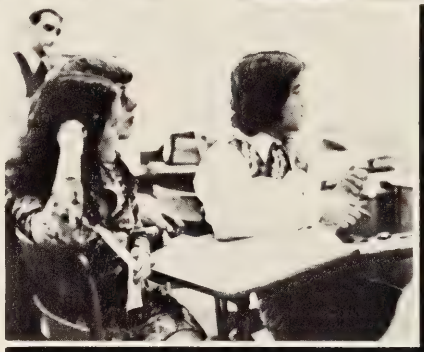












Students slowly and unwillingly returned to school in September, as an "Indian summer" prevailed over a so called winter season. President Ford granted former Pres. Nixon full pardon. Jim Conners won his tennis match at Wimbelton. And President Ford offered clemency to draft dodgers who would answer to an oath of allegiance along with twenty-four months of public service. Protests arose against bussing in Boston, as the Israelis raided Lebanon. In the midst of the frenzy, Charles A. Lindbergh, the first to make an international voyage by airplane, died at the age of 72. The early fall saw the opening to the Watergate Trial. Even though Evil Knievel failed to rocket 1600 feet across the Snake River, Rhoda stole high ratings on the television scene. Television managed to take a 'leap for mankind' as shows were presented for mature audiences. Although television has come a great distance, audiences can never forget the twenty well spent years of the great Ed Sullivan. His death shocked all Americans, since his show meant a beginning for many stars. In athletics it was indeed a time of definite change. Hank Aaron ended his year with 733 homeruns, well over Babe Ruth's historic 714 homeruns. The Oakland A's snatched the World Series title for the third consecutive year. Ali was named fighter of the year. And the Pittsburgh Steelers finally won the Super Bowl title. Politically, a well fought race in the 4th district carried incumbent Robert Daniel back to Congress. Although the Tidewater area voted Republican, the Democrats gained greater control over Congress by filling several new seats with Democrats. Fashion wise, trends resembled those of the 40's and 50's. The natural look was out for woman's make-up. In vogue was a return to classic clothes and basic black. Musically, every major radio station played oldies-but-goodies. One wondered if the nation, in its pause, looked backward for security. Movies reflected the sentimentality of the seventies with The Sting and with The Great Gatsby. The genius of Mel Brooks caused raging laughter nationwide with his productions of Blazing Saddles and Young Frankenstein. In January, President Ford released his anti-inflationary points, promising to permit rebates on taxes payed in 1974, taxcuts in 1975, and an increase tax on crude oil. Unemployment unfortunately hit a 33 year-high; President Ford claimed of a 'severe recession' in his state of the Union message. Confused, confusing, and tumultuous. If there are ever was a calm moment, it was short lived. Governor Rockerfeller became Vice-President, the world lost humerous Jack Benny and his violin, the Supreme Court extended student rights, and the 'Big Three' (Chysler, Ford, General Motors) elevated automobile prices. In a world of scattered indecisiveness and change, people tend to wonder if it is all worth it. People as a whole, must resolve some means of self-suffienciency. Consequently the choices at present are unreliable sources for the future. With a better concern and understanding for the issues of the day, we truly realize what Bob Dylan meant: "These Times," really, "Are A Changin'."
